The Troops Moving for Utah—Vacant Judgeships in the Territory—The Governorship, &c.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 21.

It is estimated that the troops now moving in the direction of Utah comprise about 2,000 men.

There are two more Federal Judgeships in the Territory which will soon be filled, and probably the other Marshal will be appointed as preliminary to enforcing the civil process. In the event of opposition on the part of the Mormons to this, the military will be employed to enforce the laws and protect persons and property of the United States from Mormon encroachment. It is supposed, however, that no necessity for extreme measures will arise.

The Governorship is still unsettled. Although several gentlemen are solicited for the position, the Government is evidently cautious, to select one who will combine personal bravery with administrative talent and unquestioned discretion.

The programme of operations for Utah will be consummated with the least possible delay.

Hon. THOMAS CUMMINGS, of Pennsylvania, has resigned his Associate Judgeship in Kansas Territory.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 20.

In the Navy Appropriation Bill of the last session is a section authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy, under the direction of the President, to employ such officers of our Army and Navy as may be necessary, for the purpose of making an exploration, and of verifying the surveys already made of a Ship Canal, near the Isthmus of Darien, to connect the waters of the Pacific and Atlantic, by the Atrato and Turyado rivers, provided that the expense shall not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. KELLY, of New-York, undertook, a few years ago, to explore the Atrato route, and, at great expense, and much labor, made instrumental surveys of the whole region. The great HUMBOLDT, to whom Mr. NEWMAN's maps were communicated, previously approved of his project, having had in constant view the construction of a ship canal between the two oceans, and believing the project to be entirely practicable. Mr. KELLY will be in this City in a few days, and will give further information to the Navy Department on the subject of his project. The Government may, then, deem it advisable to verify his surveys by a scientific exploration, to be conducted by officers of the army and navy, as provided for by Congress.

It was HUMBOLDT who first suggested the idea of an interoceanic Ship Canal without locks, which should be wide and deep enough to permit ships of any burden to pass, without breaking bulk.

The explorations by Dr. CULLEN in 1849, '50 and '51, of the Darien Isthmus, led to an undertaking by an English Company, at the head of which was Sir CHARLES FOX, to make a ship canal between the Gulf of San Miguel and Caledonia Bay, without locks, and of 150 feet in breadth and 30 feet in depth, at low tide, so as to permit ships of large burden to pass each other, from ocean to ocean, or through a strait.

GISBORNE and FOXE, civil engineers, were sent to test the accuracy of Dr. CULLEN's observations. Their report, made in 1852, was extremely favorable. It is hardly possible to conceive that Mr. GISBORNE would present, as a report, an instrument of imposition. He surveyed, carefully, the entire distance from the Atlantic side south, and then from the Pacific side, and left only an interval of five or six miles of an open level plain unexplored, for the reason that he had seen it from both ends of his line of survey. He reported that there was no high land to overcome, except a very narrow ridge, only 150 feet above the water, which he hardly took into account in his general estimate of the expense of the necessary excavations for the contemplated canal. He states the distance between the navigable waters, on either end of the coast route, to be only thirty miles.

This Government, in 1853, dispatched Lieutenant STRAIN, of the Navy, with a party of 27 men, to explore GISBORNE's route, at the request of the English Company concerned, and with a view to be first with other nations in a guarantee of the security and neutrality of the Canal, should it be found practicable and should it ever be made. Lt. STRAIN's report, as will be remembered, was entirely contradictory of all the principal facts stated by Dr. CULLEN and by Mr GISBORNE, and completely quashed the project.

The other day a new phase was put upon the matter, by the report of the voluntary exploration of Dr. CALDWELL, Assistant Surgeon of the U. S. Frigate Independence, a notice of which first appeared in your paper, and was subsequently corroborated by official dispatches to the Navy Department.

Dr. CALDWELL's report corresponds, with remarkable accuracy, with the statement made by Mr. GISBORNE, of his exploration from the Gulf of San Miguel to a point distant only six or eight miles from Caledonia Bay.

Now, if both Mr. GISBORNE and Dr. CALDWELL are not given to romance, the long desired route for a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien is found. At the Navy Department it is believed that Dr. CALDWELL's report is correct, notwithstanding Lieutenant STRAIN's previous report, contradicting similar statements from GISBORNE. It remains for our Government to pursue the subject.

It was the report of our officer, Lieutenant STRAIN, which nipped in the bud the grand project formed in England of constructing the Darien ship-canal. Dr. CALDWELL's report will revive the project, and it becomes our Government now to reconcile the contradictory statements of our officers, or put them to the test of another and more complete exploration.

Meanwhile, as I mentioned above, Mr. KELLY's Atrato canal route is not to be lost sight of, and there is no doubt that the Government will proceed, without delay, to send out an exploring party to verify Mr. KELLY's surveys. X. Y. Z.

Preparations in Cincinnati for the Great Railroad Celebration.

CINCINNATI, Thursday, May 21.

The City Council last night passed a resolution inviting the President of the United States, the Vice-President, the members of the Cabinet, Ministers representing foreign Governments, the Governors of Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana and Missouri, the Mayors and Councils of Baltimore, Parkersburg, Marietta, Chillicothe, Vincennes, St. Louis and Louisville, to visit Cincinnati on the occasion of the opening of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, and the Cincinnati and Marietta Railroad, on the 3d and 4th of June next, as guests of the city, in her corporate capacity. Arrangements are making on a grand scale for the event.

Murder Cases Before the Supreme Court, Worcester, Mass.

WORCESTER, Mass., Thursday, May 21.

Four murder cases have been brought before the Supreme Court in this city since Thursday morning. The Court finished its session this afternoon with the following result:

JOHN GLYNN, for the murder of EMMA MAGURROW and his wife last November, was found not guilty.

SAM. GLEASON, for the murder of his infant child in January, was discharged on his own recognizance.

GODFREED REDMAN, for the murder of SAM. FINNEMAN last December, plead guilty on a charge of manslaughter, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the House of Correction.

LUCINDA EARSON, (colored,) tried on a charge of killing a colored girl, was nolle prossqued.

There is considerable feeling expressed at the result of these trials.

An Absconding Clerk Caught.

CLEVELAND, Thursday, May 21.

A clerk in the office of the American Express Company at Tiffin, Ind., absconded last morning with $2,000 of the Company's money, but he was arrested at Crestline this evening and the money recovered.

Wreck of the Schooner R. E. Morton—Three Men Drowned.

NEW-BEDFORD, Thursday, May 21.

The schooner R. E. Morton was wrecked off the Dangerous Rock in this port, and in an attempt to rescue the crew, the Westchester's boat was upset, and three of the crew, named JAMES A. BOWLAND and C. W. BURGESS and a colored man, whose name is unknown, were drowned. Two others of the crew clung to the bottom of the boat, and they and the crew of the schooner were afterwards saved.

Religious Gatherings.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF THE UNITED STATES.

CLEVELAND, Thursday, May 21.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States met here to-day. One hundred and sixty-three persons were enrolled as Commissioners, and many members are still arriving. The meeting was opened with a sermon by Rev. LAWRENCE H. RIDDLE. Rev. Mr. FISHER, of Cincinnati, was elected Moderator. After electing Clerks, the Assembly adjourned till to-morrow.

THE CONVENTION OF CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS AT RICHMOND, VA.

RICHMOND, Thursday, May 21.

The Convention of Christian Associations for the States and Provinces assembled here to-day. They organized, and NORTON A. HALLSEY, of Buffalo, was appointed President. Delegates attended from Florida, South Carolina, Washington, New-York, Ohio, Massachusetts and New-Hampshire.

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF KENTUCKY.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Thursday, May 21.—

The Presbyterian General Assembly met here to-day, and two hundred and twenty-five members were present. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. HOWE, the moderator.

Dr. Beisiger Convicted of Manslaughter.

BUFFALO, Thursday, May 21.

Dr. BEISIGER, of Rochester, has been on trial for the past week, and has been convicted of manslaughter in the second degree, for procuring an abortion on the person of AMELIA HUTE. Sentence was deferred, and to-morrow counsel will make a bill of exceptions.

The Alleged Slaver at New-Orleans.

NEW-ORLEANS, Thursday, May 21.

The captain and owner of the schooner McLean, which was seized a few days ago on suspicion of its being fitted out for the Slave-Trade, have each been put under bonds for $2,000.

Fire and Loss of Life in Boston.

BOSTON, Thursday, May 21.

The boarding-house of Mrs. FITZPATRICK, in Stillman-street, in this City, was partially destroyed by fire last night, and herself and a boarder named DANIEL FISHER were burned to death in it.

Discussion between Frederick Douglass and Charles Lenox Remond.

SECOND EVENING.

The discussion between FREDERICK DOUGLASS and CHARLES LENOX REMOND was continued last night at the Shiloh Presbyterian Church. The building was crowded with auditors, colored and white. Rev. H. H. GARNET presided, as on the previous night; the presidents occupied their places, and the time for commencing the proceedings arrived, when the President announced that Mr. REMOND was sick and unable to attend. As Mr. DOUGLASS was present, it would be for the audience to say what should be done. [Cries of "Speech from DOUGLASS."] The President asked if such was the pleasure of the audience—if not, would they say what need should Mr. DOUGLASS proceed with his reply to Mr. REMOND? [Cries of "Aye," "Aye."]

Mr. FREDERICK DOUGLASS accordingly came forward. He felt somewhat embarrassed, he said, at the position which he occupied. He came there in expectation of replying to his eloquent friend, REMOND, and he was not without hope yet that they would see him there.

Those who took upon themselves to call the American Constitution a Slaveholding document, undertook to brand the framers of that Constitution in the vilest possible manner. To say that the Constitution was intended to uphold Slavery was to assume that the framers of the Constitution were the most fagitious knaves ever known, that they were liars and pettifoggers, keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the heart. This should not be said without the strongest proofs, and he did not believe such proofs existed. There was not a sentence, nor a syllable in a sentence, of the Constitution, that would lead any one to suppose there was any deceptive intent about it. If that Constitution had dropped down to us from the blue, over-hanging sky, and we had read its contents, there was not a man who could reasonably suppose it was intended to sanction and support the Slave system, but, on the contrary, that everything in it was intended to support justice and equality between man and man. It had been affirmed on the previous evening, by Mr. REMOND, that the Constitution must be Pro Slavery, for the reason that those who supported the Constitution were not only slaveholders, but continued to be so. But what was the fact? A majority of the old thirteen States which adopted the Constitution went home and abolished Slavery themselves. [Applause.] At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, moreover, throughout all the Slave States, there were Anti-Slavery men and women, and, in most States, Anti-Slavery Societies. There were Anti-Slavery Societies in Virginia, in Georgia, in North Carolina, in Maryland, and among the members of those societies were the Fathers of the Republic. There were enrolled the names of WASHINGTON, of JEFFERSON, of SAY, of FRANKLIN, men who were brains, heart and soul to the Republic. Abolition was so popular then that if a man uttered Anti-Slavery opinions, in any State, he did not subject himself to discredit.

Mr. DOUGLASS proceeded to consider the provision of the Constitution for the abolition of the Slave-trade in twenty years, and maintained, in opposition to Mr. REMOND, that that provision was really Anti-Slavery in its tendencies. He had Chancellor KENT's authority for it, that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, it was expected that the abolition of the Slave-trade would be the abolition of Slavery. Cut off the trade from Africa, and the sustenance of blood and pollution at home would be struck, as it were, by dry rot. All the leading Abolitionists of England had the same idea. The venerable THOMAS CLARKSON told him (the speaker) that seventy years ago he thought that the end of the Slave-trade would be the end of Slavery. GRANVILLE SHARP, however, insisted otherwise, and maintained that the Abolitionists had begun at the wrong end, and that to abolish Slavery, it was necessary to abolish the market for Slavery.

At this point Mr. REMOND entered the meeting, and was received with loud applause.

Mr. DOUGLAS proceeded. His opponent argued that the subject of Slavery was discussed by the framers of the Constitution. Undoubtedly it was, and as a result of that discussion it was driven out of the Constitution of the United States. And if the language of any part of the Constitution could be tortured into a doubt whether Slavery were favored or not, we had a right to take advantage of that dubious language, and construe it on the virtuous side.

Mr. DOUGLASS made pleasant reference to the Connecticut negroes, who, when the law forbade them to go out after 9 o'clock at night, without a lantern, carried their lanterns without candles in them, and, when the phraseology of the law was altered, and candles were enforced, carried lanterns and candles, but did not light the candles. The judge that decided that, as this candle-and-lantern law was against liberty, it was to be strictly construed, and that, as nothing was said about lighting the candles, the negroes did not violate the law, only said what everybody admitted—that a law against liberty must be literally construed; whereas a document like the Constitution, in favor of liberty generally, must not be supposed because of some uncertainty of language to favor Slavery. If Christians, who believe the Bible, commit injustice, shall we charge that injustice on the Bible? If Americans, pledged to the Constitution, commit injustice, shall we charge that injustice on the Constitution? Any school-boy could riddle such an argument. Those who argued otherwise, as his opponent did, and all the Garrisonian Abolitionists were like buzzards, those dirty birds which pass by everything fair and pleasant, and pounce only upon putrid flesh. These men pass by everything in the Constitution which is noble—all its numerous liberty-loving provisions, and say, "Oh, they are nothing, nothing!" and if there is anything that may possibly admit of two interpretations, they alight upon that, like the buzzard upon putrid meat, and seek to extract from it only that which is foul and pestilent. For his part, he was not ashamed that the American people were a law-abiding people. They loved order. They loved truth and justice, and it was an awful responsibility for any one to assume the office of shifting by a Constitution which was only framed to establish and support virtue.

Mr. G. L. REMOND then rose to take his farewell, his health having completely failed. He did not know that his voice or strength were equal to the task of addressing them. He did not mean to reflect personally on Mr. DOUGLASS, but he was of opinion that Mr. DOUGLASS did either himself or the speaker great injustice, in the manner and spirit in which he had discussed the question before them. He had hoped that a manly, magnanimous course would have been pursued; but he was mistaken. For his own part he could not trifle with American Slavery. If God felt inclined to do so, he hoped the power to do so would have descended him. He held the present to be the most important crisis in the history of Slavery.

He saw and felt in everything around him that there was a crisis coming upon us, and he was astonished that colored men should be dazed on the subject, as he argued a few minutes proved nothing, and give the traitor of Slavery the go-by. He charged the Constitution of the United States that it had guarded the hellish institution of Slavery with a watchfulness and zeal greater than was ever lavished for any other institution in the world. It had guarded Slavery as the apple of its eye. It was absurd to talk of the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to abolish the slave-trade in twenty years, when the fact was that the slave-trade was not yet abolished. He who did not know that the slave-trade was now the greatest protector of the slave-trade? When a slaver could not escape with a British or a Portuguese or Algerine bunting at his head, the stars and stripes would secure it. Why was not his opponent—he stated he could ask him his friend, but he could not—why was he not manly enough to admit that there was more capital and enterprise enlisted in the prosecution of the slave-trade, and in the maintenance of Slavery, than in any city of the Union? He had been likened to a dirty buzzard bird, because he would not recognize the American Constitution, or acknowledge Americans to be gentlemen, when the fact was that Americans were the greatest liars, rogues and villains that the world had ever seen.

He asserted that Gen. WASHINGTON was the first one who attempted a practical enforcement of the fugitive slave law, by sending a constable to the town of Concord, N. H., to chase his female slave, who had escaped from his service, and only gave up his purpose, and resigned his slave, on the ground that it would create disturbance to recapture her.

If he should visit the city of Washington, he was liable under the very eaves of the capitol of his country to be arrested and imprisoned on suspicion of being a slave, and if he could not prove his title to freedom, would be sold to the rice, sugar or cotton plantation to pay his jail fees. The fact that WASHINGTON contemplated his slaves on his death bed, was not merely an act of virtue. He knew there was one old woman who worked for him, and fought with him through the war of the Revolution who did not receive his freedom until upon his dying bed. There was not in this whole country a mountain so high, or a valley so deep, that could shelter the fugitive. The case of Dred, Scott, and many others were cited.

The immunity of the Slavery propagandists in Kansas was in perfect keeping with all the previous history of the Government. The colored man had never exercised the rights of citizenship or of manhood except by sufferance. He was indignant that Mr. DOUGLASS had attempted to associate him with Judge TANEY; and retorted that Mr. DOUGLASS had walked arm in arm with BENNETT, of the Herald, in the last Presidential campaign.

The colored man had to obtain a property qualification in order to go to the ballot-box in this State. This did not prove their equality or manhood. When the colored man was eligible to a seat in the State Assembly, and was found in the jury-box, his equality would be recognized, and not before.

Mr. DOUGLASS said the case presented rested upon his friend to do away with the positive statements he had cited as to the anti-slavery features of the Constitution he had named; he adhered to the literal meaning of the document. The provision of the Slave-Trade under the jurisdiction of the American flag had nothing to do with the question at issue. Crime of every shade and hue stalked abroad in the City of New-York, but it would be absurd on that account to say there were no laws against murder. Omnibuses were a great institution in this City. He got into one, the other day, in Broadway; the cushions were soft, the mirrors were splendid, the company excellent; but he had scarcely got seated, when the driver pulled up his horses, stuck his head down the hole, and sang out: "Hallo, there! you nigger, what are you doing in there? Get out of the omnibus!" The polite invitation was repeated until the voice of Jehu got perfect with rage and exasperation, when Douglass thought and said, "Drive on! I won't go to the Freedom-fund meeting," and he did drive on, though at any rate it looked as if there would be no fun. [Laughter.] Douglass requested his hearers to put themselves in Mr. Fillmore's place and other cases, and imagine himself dragged out of the omnibus, and he could not get no redress. What then? Should they say, as the city, "No union with omnibuses—down with omnibuses," and go to cutting up the cushions and smashing up the windows? Certainly not; but they should chase the drivers; they should turn out the miserable pack who now administered the Government, and place honest, freedom-loving people in their place. He condemned the advice to insurrection as ill-advised, and as certain to result in the extermination of the colored race.

The dissolution of the Union was the worst step that could be taken. Because his house was infested with rats, should he say out "No Union with rats," and desert his house, or should he poke 'em out? He had no idea of surrendering so easily. He used to sing, with his Methodist brethren:

"Oh, we have been wid ye,
And we still is wid ye,
And we will go wid ye to the end."

He meant to stick to the omnibus.

Mr. D. went on in this strain, exciting great amusement in the audience, until time was called, and Mr. REMOND rose to reply.

The remarks of Mr. REMOND were a recital of the main points on which he relied to establish the Pro-Slavery intent of the Constitution, and were well and forcibly put, carrying the audience with him, and securing their applause.

Mr. DOUGLASS followed, occupying his ten minutes in recapitulating the points of his argument in disclaiming any offensive personalities, and in complimenting his opponent for his learning, eloquence, &c. Mr. REMOND waived his right to occupy any further time. The speakers had signified their willingness to leave the question without a vote, so after a few notices had been read, the audience adjourned by invitation to the basement, where, over ice-cream and confectionary, the disputants held a soirée.

Marine Matters.

Mr. J. W. WALLER, wrecker, who saved the schooner Wide Awake, attempted to row out of Lewes Creek this morning, to assist and take off the crew from the schooner D. C. Forest; when beyond the Bar his boat upset, and three of his crew, two white and one negro man, were drowned. Mr. WALLER, and one other young man, were taken home senseless, but are likely to recover. The bodies of the two white men are not yet recovered. Captain TILTON, wife and crew, were saved by Mr. JOHN R. BENTON and G. P. CORTWELL.—[By letter to ELLWOOD WALLER, Esq.

A telegraphic dispatch from Baltimore, to JOHN D. JONES, President of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, says the bark Prompt, lying at Mobile, and bound to Baltimore, had been struck with lightning and set on fire, when she was scuttled and sunk in fifteen feet water.

The steamboat Armenia, having been thoroughly overhauled and supplied with new boilers, new furniture, &c., has been placed on the day line to Albany, touching at various way places. She makes her first trip on Monday, the 25th of May, leaving Pier foot of Murray-street, North River, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, at 7 A. M., and returning on opposite days. She is commanded by Capt. J. P. SMITH.

LEWES, Del., Sunday, May 17.

The schooner Daniel C. Foster, of New-York, Capt. TILTON, from James River, with pine wood, for New-York, parted moorings and came on the bar nearly opposite Lewes, this morning, at 9 o'clock—schooner full of water.

MISSING.—JOHN MULLEN, of Yarmouth, N. S., a sailor attached to the Br. bark Celia, lying at Jersey City, has been missing since the night of the 19th inst. A lantern which he had was found on the staging-piece this morning. He had on his person about fifty dollars.

The steamer Bay State, of the Fall River Line, arrived at her dock at 7 o'clock this morning. She reports the storm to have been very severe on the Sound last night.

There is a movement on foot among ship-owners, having for its object the abolition of the custom of paying advances to seamen. A document, understood as being explanatory of the origin and design of the movement, has circulated, and is receiving numerous signatures.

CANAL NAVIGATION.—From a letter dated Lockport, May 20, we learn that the break in the Erie Canal, near that place, had been repaired, and that boats are being locked for the West, but not a boat has passed downward. At Buffalo Harbor the work of repairing the breach in the Canal is progressing very slowly. In a letter dated at that place, May 18, the writer says that if the contractors (whose staff alone has work) will be competent in four days; but if they are allowed to take up the contract, it will not be finished under two weeks.—Albany Journal, 21st.

[illegible]

[illegible] Sir ROBERT has been removed, or has removed himself, from the Admiralty, in probable apprehension of the visit of CONSTANTINE, whom he so flagrantly insulted in his late speeches; while the humiliation thus brought about is trebly galling by the proffered command of DEVONPORT to Admiral Sir C. NAPIER, who was so undeservedly lampooned for proceedings in the Baltic that he could not have obviated. He has enhanced his well known credit for disinterestedness by declining the post offered to him, though it is one of the retiring prizes of his profession, and would in many respects have been very grateful to him.

The social, moral and educational condition of England continues to provoke daily increasing discussion of a prestingly important nature, especially in regard to what Miss MARTINEAU calls the great sin of great cities, but which city and country have alike received to shut their eyes and ears to while ringing their hands over it. The most extraordinary of the May meetings this year will certainly be that convened by Mr. ROBERT OWEN, especially if all the people he has invited to attend should happen to be present in St. Martin's Hall next Thursday. The invitations which that remarkable character has published in the columns of a paper conducted by his oldest disciple, Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE, is so comprehensive and cosmopolitan that, could it be realized, it would throw the singular procession of Anacharsis Cloots (friend of the human race) far into the shade, and rival, if it did not surpass, the motley gathering which Michael Novgorod witnesses every June. The principles upon which the venerable Harmonist proposes to reconstruct society and regenerate mankind, are as well known that his programme calls for little comment. His announcement of the Millennium only differs from them he has been making for the last fifty years in the change of phraseology consequent by his conversion from the materialism which pervaded his former teaching, to that advanced Spiritualism which embraces table rapping and its kindred phenomena.

Owenism, however, notwithstanding this change in the opinion of its founder, is still announced as "the only true universal practical religion," with the promulgation of which his advertisement vaguely connects "the new spiritual manifestations," which served the leading journal on Wednesday for the text of a whole column of leaded type.

The publicity of its pages had previously been refuted to Mr. OWEN's announcement, and hence its appearance in the Reasoner, to whose weekly four pages the numerous organs of unbelief and the various theories of social reform which existed a dozen years ago have gradually dwindled. It is believed by some that all those protests against the institutions of the present which have taken the various forms of Deism, Materialism, Socialism, and Chartism, have died out, but it is only necessary to look a little below the surface to perceive that they still exist, are as widely diffused as ever, and, though now almost dormant, only require some event to disturb the existing quietude, in order to rear their hydra-like forms once more. Mr. HOLYOAKE, who is now a truer representative of the first phase of Owenism than Mr. OWEN himself, still has disciples enough to support a paper; and lectures are still delivered on Sunday evenings, to considerable audiences of working men, on such topics as Christ and Crishna, the Moral Disadvantages of Christianity, and the Philosophy of the Bible. The existence of such opinions, side by side with belief in spirit-rapping, table-turning, and witchcraft, (some extraordinary stories of which have lately gone the rounds,) afford matter for deep study. Probably such extreme works for good, by acting as the counterpoise and antidote to the other, and will continue to do so until ignorance is finally expelled from the world, should such an era of light ever dawn upon it.

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

Grand Review in Honor of Duke Constantine—The Imperial Cortege—Immense Assemblage—Speech from the Russian Prince—Mr. Sumner's Refusal to Accept a Public Dinner—Miscellaneous News and Gossip of Paris.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PARIS, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

The Grand Review yesterday, in honor of the Russian Prince, embraced sixty thousand men. In this number the Imperial Guard figured for twenty thousand men, and the first military division, the garrison of Paris, for the balance. The National Guard of Paris, (citizen soldiery,) which numbers sixty thousand men, was not represented.

The Emperor, in the uniform of a General of Division, and wearing the grand cordon of the Order of St. ANNE of Russia, had at his right the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE, in the uniform of a Grand Admiral, and wearing the grand cordon of the Legion of Honor, presented to him two days before by his Majesty; on his left, the Prince NAPOLEON and the young Prince of Nassau, (candidate for the Viceroyalty of the United Danubian Principalities.)

In the numerous and brilliant suite of his Majesty, the names of the Crimean heroes known to the world, the enemies of yesterday, were strangely intermingled, thus: Marshal PELISSIER and Gen. GORTSCHAKOFF, brother of the GORTSCHAKOFF; Generals TODLEBEN and NIEL, the two opposing engineers at Sebastopol; Gen. LUDERS and Marshals CANROBERT and BOSQUET; Generals D'ALLONVILLE and DANNENBERG; Admirals HAMELIN and BERESINE, Captain of frigate, Prince ns BOSTOFF, Prince ESPERS OUKHTOMSKI, and the Baron TOTTEN; Marshals VAILLANT, MAGNAN, BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS, Generals MELLINET, MORRIS, and Generals LUPEANDI and MANTUROFF; Generals Count KISSELEFF and Count CHEPTONITCH, and a large number of other French and Russian, Prussian, English, Sardinian, Wurtemburgian and other officers, in all, perhaps, two hundred. It was a suite of rare distinction, and one which would have done honor to a sovereign much less parvenu than LOUIS NAPOLEON.

Immediately in front of His Majesty marched abreast eleven Generals, aids-de-camp; further on the platoon of His Majesty's ordonnance officers; still further on His Majesty's Masters of the Horse, and at the head of the cortège a squad of the Cent-Gardes. The balance of the corps of the Cent-Gardes closed up the cortège.

The cortège was followed to the Champ de Mars by the carriage of the Empress, who was accompanied by the Emperor's aunt, the Grand Duchess STEPHENIE, of Baden, and by carriages in which were seated the Princess MATHILDE, the Prince and Princess MURAT, and other members of the Imperial family. The Empress followed the suite through a part of the review, and, when the defile commenced, drove up to the Ecole Militaire, and took her seat on the balcony, in the midst of her maids of honor and the ladies of the Ministers.

The crowd that witnessed this grand review was immense. Since the distribution of the eagles on the 14th of May, 1852, no such crowd has been seen in the neighborhood of the Champ de Mars. The coup d'œil was magnificent. The spectators, arranged on the sloping borders of the field and in the tribunes, formed the frame; the army of 60,000 men, standing motionless in eight lines a mile long, with the Emperor and his suite moving up and down, formed the picture. Even the Russians, accustomed as they are to large bodies of armed men, must have been struck with this sight.

CONSTANTINE made a speech at the Count KISSELEFF's dinner. First the Count KISSELEFF drank to the health of the Emperor of France, then Marshal VAILLANT drank to the health of the Emperor of Russia. The Duke of MALAKOFF then rose and toasted the Russian Army, a toast that was loudly cheered by the Frenchmen present. The Grand Duke CONSTANTINE responded as follows: "To the French Army, which, far from degenerating, has grown in the esteem and the admiration of the world! To the brave French soldiers, whom one is proud to meet as adversaries on the field of battle! Whom one is more happy still to meet as friends, in the midst of the prosperities of a fruitful peace! I thank God, gentlemen, who gives me the occasion to proclaim openly my thought before the chiefs who represent the flower of this valiant army! I drink to the French Army!"

The Prince likes Paris so well that, in all probability, he will prolong his stay beyond the time indicated in the programme.

A few days ago the Poles present in Paris were invited to a grand dinner at the Paris Poles, given in honor of their national fête. The young Prince OSTROWSKI, who presided, returned from a visit to the Emperor's aunt in Baden on the occasion. It was not observed, until at the moment when the toasts were to commence, that the flag of Russia was in the place of the Grand Duchess, floating from the top of the establishment. Great excitement prevailed for a moment, but the flag was quietly removed by the waiter before the guests had recovered the effect of the surprise.

The Paris Revue, in an article on the fête of the poor Arabs yesterday, commences with the following: M. [illegible] of the visit of the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE, "ALFRED DE MUSSET died on Friday last. He was wrong; at the epoch in which we live, the thing is to live, if it were only for curiosity, only to see defiling on our boulevards the descendants of the Kings of 1815."

I believe I have already told you that preparations were making for a dinner to Mr. SUMNER in this city. Mr. SUMNER has very properly refused the tendered honor in a letter which was published in French in the Journal des Débats, and afterwards in English in Galignani's Messenger. You will see by this letter that Mr. SUMNER refused the compliment ostensibly on the ground of his health, but I have reason to believe that he placed his refusal upon less personal grounds; and in this light the refusal does him more honor than would the dinner. He no doubt thought that the American name had suffered enough disgrace by the desertion of its Senate seat, without displaying the affair here before foreigners. I believe it was NAPOLEON who said that "dirty linen ought always to be washed at home." There was an evident impropriety in seeking to bring up before foreigners, and on foreign soil, a quarrel so peculiarly domestic as that which has aroused so much sympathy for the Massachusetts Senator; and certainly we, who are living abroad for the moment, have suffered enough criticism and enough humiliation on this very subject without seeking so directly to provoke a renewal of the attacks.

In this view of the case, however much I may sympathize with the motives of the gentlemen who placed the letters in the hands of the newspaper editors for publication, I cannot but condemn that act. Since the dinner did not take place, this bringing the subject before the French public in the columns of the leading French paper, was entirely gratuitous, and not only useless but mischievous.

You will see by Mr. SUMNER's letter, that the letter of the Committee must have been ambiguous, since Mr. S. makes use of the phrase, that "he may be permitted to believe that the intended compliment was in response to his public services," etc. The Committee, indeed, may have thought of the impropriety of mentioning on foreign ground the events of last year, connected with Mr. SUMNER's name, and sought by the phraseology of their letter to avoid this construction; but it would be impossible now to mention Mr. SUMNER's name without associating it in the mind with the scene of the Senate Chamber. Besides two Ex Presidents, several Ministers, and many distinguished members of both the Senate and the House, have been here within the last few years, and no one proposed giving them a dinner. So that but one conclusion is rational, and if the Committee thought to avoid this conclusion by the phraseology of their letter of invitation, the means adopted were singularly inadequate to the end aimed at.

The name of SUMNER has been "consecrated" in France and passed into the state of an adage. They speak now of "Bustonds of the law," "Bustonds of justice," as they do of Don Quixottes of chivalry, Ingos of honor, &c. He stands for the representative of the sans culotte lawyer of the criminal courts. The name SUMNER has made its entry into the French language as an adjective of significant and extended application.

The disease of ALFRED DE MUSSET was hypertrophy of the heart. His sickness was of but short duration. It manifested itself in the form of fainting paroxysms, in the final one of which he announced himself, that it would be his last. In the fifth or sixth paroxysm, after having suffered a great deal, he fell into a deep sleep of stupor, and thus passed off without apparent transition into death. His was the seventh fauteuil of the Academy, and he was its eleventh occupant.

Fourteen prisoners were yesterday brought before the Police Correctionnelle under the charge of being members of a secret political Society, of carrying prohibited arms, and of the detention of munitions of war. These were the individuals who attempted on the 24th of February last, the anniversary of the Revolution of 1848, to hold a meeting in commemoration of that event on the Place de la Bastille. The trial has been adjourned a week.

M. GAILLARDET, former editor of the Courrier des États Unis, the author in name of "La Tour de Neale," lately made application to M. BULOZ, proprietor of La Revue des Deux Mondes, to purchase that journal. M. BULOZ, who holds to his journal with the tenacity of a miser, demanded of your former confrère if he knew that he asked a million and a half of francs for his journal? M. GAILLARDET replied that he was prepared for that answer, and thus M. BULOZ was obliged to ask for time to consider. M. GAILLARDET, it is said, was acting principally for his friend, M. EMILE DE GIRARDIN, who is already tired of his retreat.

The bill for the purchase of Longwood, on the Island of St. Helena, has been presented to the Corps Legislatif. The sum destined for this acquisition is 180,000 francs. The bill informs us that Longwood has been turned into a farm; the chamber where NAPOLEON drew his last breath is now a stable! The ground where he was buried has also suffered a deplorable profanation. The Americans, it is said, with a view to a speculation, disputed the possession of Longwood with the French. But thanks to the alliance, France was advised of these movements by England, and was given the preference in the purchase.

The "Lisette" of BERANGER, the faithful friend with whom he has lived almost since his youth, Madame JUDITH, has just died, preceding to the grave the one to whom she had devoted her life. A friend and great admirer of BERANGER, who wished to make him a handsome life pension, but who knew that the poet would not receive it if he knew it, settled on Madame JUDITH a handsome sum during her life, knowing well to what use it would be applied. But now this resource is suddenly removed from the aged poet and he will be thrown upon the meagre income paid him by M. PERROTIN for the right of publication of his works. This sum, I believe, is 1200 francs. He obstinately refuses all offers of gifts or pensions which his great genius has gained for him. M. JULES LACOMPTE is responsible for these statements.

Not only have we at this moment a large number of Russian Generals, Admirals, and Princes within our walls, but the editors of the principal journals of St. Petersburg and Moscow are also here, sending home, no doubt, long reports of the honors paid their favorite Prince and their talented generals.

A trial which is moving the Church in France is now going on at Grenoble, and had its origin in the miracle of Notre Dame de Salette. This trial is exceedingly curious in some of its details, and the public are in the expectation of some wonderful disclosures.

A young medical man, Dr. SALLE, practicing at Charlons, performed lately the operation of tracheotomy (opening the windpipe) on a child that had croup and malignant sore throat. Blood escaped into the windpipe from the wound, and in order to save the child's life, the Doctor immediately applied his mouth and sucked the blood out. Next day alarming symptoms declared themselves in the region of the lungs, his respiration became difficult, and in forty-eight hours from the time of the operation Dr. SALLE breathed his last.

You state that HUME, the spiritualist, is at Springfield, Mass. A Madrid journal states that he has just arrived in that City, that he refuses to give sittings, and that he intends soon to resume his journey towards the South, whither he is traveling for his health. Which is the "real old Dr. JACOB," or has HUME the power of ubiquitous re-production?

MALAKOFF.

The New British Parliament.

LORD PALMERSTON'S SPEECH ON THE ADDRESS.

The address in the House of Commons, in answer to the Queen's speech, was moved by Mr. DODSON and seconded by Mr. BUCHANAN. The House was not disposed to hear a debate, but before the vote was taken,

Lord PALMERSTON said: The House, Sir, seems so little disposed to go into any discussion upon the various subjects to which the Speech related that I certainly shall not take upon myself to do so; but reference has been made to one or two points upon which I feel it is necessary for me to say a few words on the part of the Government. I would first allude to the topic mentioned by the honorable member for Dumfries. An address was moved and agreed to last session with respect to the establishment of a Department of Justice. The question was brought forward by the right honorable gentleman, the member for Dublin University. We stated at the time that it was a subject full of difficulty, but we regarded the mode in which the proposition should be carried into effect as, and in that opinion I am sure the right honorable gentleman himself will concur. I can only say, therefore, that we have not, and do not intend to, take the matter of abolishing the office which the right honorable gentleman moved that there ought to be, into consideration. I trust we shall be able to propose to the House some measure which shall effect the object aimed at with the sanction of the House, and in conformity with the wishes of the majority of the people in Parliament, because such discussions have had, and may, perhaps, have indirectly, a very injurious effect on the minds of many persons who have indeed in the present, and will, if proposed to the House, be in future, ready to engage in discussions upon the large and sweeping question of a change in the representation of the people in Parliament, because such discussions have not by any possibility lead to any conclusive result in the present Session. [Hear, hear,] while it is quite obvious that discussions begun in one session and continued to another could only unsettle the minds of men, and give rise to anticipations which would embarrass those who on a future occasion might have to propose measures to the House. [Hear, hear.] But, Sir, Her Majesty's Government quite admit that it will be their duty during the period that will intervene between the conclusion of the present session and the beginning of the next to take the subject into their fullest and most deliberate consideration. [Cheers.] It would be unsuitable in me, at a moment when the Government have not had an opportunity of giving to the question the consideration which is due, to say anything with respect to the details of measures to be proposed in a future session, which would imply anticipatory conclusions, which, by fixing the Government upon one point or another, might lead afterwards to embarrassment if the result should not coincide with the expectations excited, and which, at all events, would interfere with the freedom of our deliberations in the meantime. [Hear.] It will be, however, I believe, the duty of the Government in the ensuing recess to give that matter their most serious and anxious consideration, and I hope, indeed I am confident, that at the beginning of the next session we shall be able to propose to Parliament some measure which will be calculated to satisfy the just expectations of any party, and to correct any defects which may exist in the present Reform Act, as well as to extend to the franchise those classes of persons who at present are excluded from it. [Hear, hear.] More than this I trust the House will not expect me to say at present. [Hear, hear.] If this House has confidence in the present Government, they ought to show it by extending forbearance, and by not pressing this session for any declaration upon particular points in reference to representative reform. If this House has not sufficient confidence in us to wait until the next session for the production of measures upon a subject requiring the gravest consideration, then it had better say so, and at once place the administration of the affairs of the country in other hands. ["Hear, hear," and a laugh.] I am glad to be able to congratulate the House, as Her Majesty, in her gracious speech has done, upon the prospect which the condition of European affairs at present holds out of a continuance of peace. I trust that the animosities engendered by the great conflict in which a part of Europe was engaged for two years, will give way to the more peaceful relations and intercourse which have succeeded that war, and that the great Powers who were engaged in that contest, feeling that their interests are identified with the maintenance of good relations with one another, will cast into oblivion all those sentiments of hostility which the conflict for a time may have created, and permit them to be replaced by feelings of good will and friendship, as more beneficial to all countries. I trust, too, that all the great Powers of Europe will discover that freedom of commercial intercourse, and a development of the national resources, form not only the best system of policy for the interests of their particular countries, but that they also create a link of union with other countries which otherwise might occupy an adverse position. The more a Government developes the resources of a country, while with one hand it increases its powers of self defence, on the other it creates a daily increasing bond of interest, which is so connected with the maintenance of peace as to dismiss any Government from the prosecution of an unjust or unnecessary war. [Hear, hear.] There was one other subject to which my noble friend alluded upon which I must say a word. I refer to the question of church-rates. [Hear hear.] That, also, is a subject, as the House is aware, which abounds with practical difficulties. However, the subject is now under the consideration of her Majesty's Government, and I hope we may be able to propose some measure which will get rid of the difficulties at present existing. I hope, however, the House will not expect us to introduce any measure until we have made up our minds upon the matter, but I can assure them the subject is under consideration, with an anxious desire to frame a measure which may be satisfactory to all parties. I am not aware that there is anything further with which I have to trouble the House at present.

Mr. BOWYER.—I congratulate the House that we have now a distinct pledge from the noble lord that he intends next year to bring forward a measure of Parliamentary reform. There is no mistake as to his intentions. The noble lord tells us that in the present state of the representation there are great anomalies—that various classes are not now represented in this House who deserve to be represented, and that it will be the duty of Her Majesty's Government during the recess, to frame such a measure as will confer the representation upon those who are entitled. Such statements accordingly as I have described them, I can only say I am not one of those who might be inclined to interrupt the course of business in the present session. [Hear, hear.] Having a clear and distinct statement from the noble lord that it is his intention to deal with the question of Parliamentary reform, I shall not interfere with his efforts by throwing any obstacle in his way. Such being the interpretation which I have placed upon the words of the noble lord, I thought it only right to state to this House, in plain and simple language, my view of the pledge which I believe he has given us to-night. [Hear, hear.]

The Address was then agreed to.

THE REFORM QUESTION.

From the London Times, May 8.

The new House may not be disposed to hasten its own premature destruction, but of course such a fund of political capital as is furnished by the Reform question will not be neglected by a certain class of politicians. We shall probably have no actual full-grown Reform Bills during the present Session, after the declaration of Lord PALMERSTON yesterday. The Ministry has resolved to devote the short period of this year which remains for legislation to the passing of practical measures which are likely to meet with no obstacle, except such as may arise from the complexity of their details and the natural inertness of the assemblies which are to sanction them. During the recess they promise to devote themselves to Parliamentary Reform. The details of their measure will be known in February, 1858, and not earlier. Lord PALMERSTON will give no sign of his intentions, and he is wise; for, whatever might be the scope of his Reform Bill, he would be at once under a double fire. The allied but diverse hosts of the Opposition would attack him from different quarters. Government would be denounced as revolutionary by one party, and retrograde by another. It would be a fine thing for the Conservatives to exhort an indiscreet pledge against a large Reform by inveighing against any proposed measure, while the ultra Liberals roused their respective localities against the Minister who held out no hope of the Ballot or the Lodging Suffrage. So Lord PALMERSTON will say nothing. Sufficient unto the session is the labor thereof. He says what has been done, and what it is intended to do. The Treaty of Paris has been executed, the Neufchatel business is coming to a close, the settlement of the Persian difference has been completed, the redemption of the Sound Dues has been carried into effect. On the other hand, there are negotiations respecting Central America, and there is work to be done on the Chinese coast; then there are the Budget and the Law Reforms. Attend to these, he says in effect, and you will not find the time too long for the labor. We shall be much surprised if next August we can congratulate him upon the complete fulfillment of even the modest programme with which he has opened the first session of his new Parliament.

The United States and New-Granada.

From the London Post (Ministerial).

We learn from intelligence just received from America, that the United States Commissioner has broken off negotiations with New-Granada, and that an American squadron is about to be sent to the coasts of the Isthmus for the purpose of exacting that redress which diplomacy has hitherto failed in obtaining. The American version of the difficulty is this: That in April, 1856, a number of American citizens were massacred on the line of the Panama Railroad—that the authorities of New-Granada are perfectly unable to provide protection for life along that most important inter-oceanic communication, and that they pertinaciously refuse to afford satisfaction for the past and security for the future. On the other hand, the Government of New Granada insists that the quarrel which ended in bloodshed and murder was provoked by the overbearing insolence and lawless conduct of hordes of Americans, whose indistinct notions of respect for authority may be inferred from the fact that many of them are Californian adventurers or filibusters en route to join General WALKER. The Cabinet at Washington in this instance has not followed the Greytown precedent. It sent a Commissioner to Bogota to negotiate, and its ultimatum having been rejected, the Resident Minister and the Commissioner have ceased to hold any diplomatic relations with New-Granada, and a naval force, as we have stated, is about to be employed to bring that refractory Republic to a sense of reason and justice. The course which the Government of the United States has pursued is not open to any charge of haste or violence. It has been conciliatory and temporizing; and as injury having been committed, for which atonement is denied, it is difficult to see what other proceeding upon the failure of negotiations could now be taken short of the employment of actual force. It is said that New Granada is a weak State, unable to enforce even its own laws. This weakness cannot be pleaded as a justification of wrong, for in reality it is a strong argument why the Government of the United States should take with a strong hand means to establish that security for life and property which at present, from some cause or other, does not exist.

The Government of the United States having, it would seem, a clear and indisputable right to compel redress, the most point to be considered is the extent and nature of that redress. If we are to adopt the opinions expressed by several of our Transatlantic correspondents, the Permanent acquisition of the Isthmus is the object which American policy, availing itself of the existing difficulty, seeks to accomplish. We are informed, that if the American race on both sides of the Isthmus, the natives of the Isthmus, and the Government of the Granadines shall be unanimous in the desire of a separation from the Spanish Republic, and in the formation of a new State, which would be the most natural and convenient outlet for the commerce of the Western States, and consequently, rest with the most powerful nation on the Continent, that all the losses resulting from the late events, and,

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Association of Superintendents of Insane Asylums.

This Association continued in session on Wednesday at the Metropolitan Hotel.

In addition to the members present on Tuesday, the following gentlemen appeared and took their seats: Dr. W. Rowe, Hamilton County Lunatic Asylum, Cincinnati; Dr. H. W. Ryan, late assistant Physician, "Sanford Hall;" Dr. S. Dupuis, Quebec Lunatic Asylum, Quebec; Dr. Lazarus, Kings County Lunatic Asylum, Brooklyn.

Dr. Harris read a letter from Rev. Jas. Shaw, Chaplain of the Northern Ohio Lunatic Asylum, in respect to the importance of the preparation of a uniform collection of appropriate [illegible] hymns in institutions for the insane, in which all tones of a doctrinal and denominational character should be omitted, and those calculated to exert a mild, beneficial or consolatory influence be retained. The subject was referred to the Superintendent who, and the Chaplains of the kind, made some years ago by the late Dr. Woodward, and now in use at the Hospital in Worcester, Mass., which was pronounced to be good and [illegible].

Dr. Kirkbride presented for the inspection of the members a model of a [illegible] for the improvement of the condition of the Tuke family of York, England, to whom mankind is so largely indebted for the leading part they have taken in the reformation of the treatment of the insane. Dr. Kirkbride also brought forward the plans of the new Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, now in process of construction, and moved that a full and particularized exposition of the plans of new asylums, by him, Brigham and others, be made at the next meeting, [illegible]. It is intended to convert the new edifice exclusively with gaslight, and the present building with fan stoves—which will be the first experiment of their entire separation made in this country.

Dr. Gray presented a plan of an institution for insane convicts, and entered into a narrative of the steps taken towards a separation for this class of insane in the State of New-York. In 1854 a law was passed directing the removal of insane convicts from the asylum at Utica, and of those convicts found insane in the prisons to a separate building, in connection with one of the prisons. In 1857 a law was passed authorizing the Prison Inspectors to proceed in the erection of a proper building, and appropriating $30,000 for the purpose. The plans have been accepted, and the building will be commenced on the 1st of June next.

Dr. Parrish stated some remarks in reference to the importance of sending reports of institutions for the insane to the various public libraries, including those of colleges, literary and scientific societies. The case of this subject was intrusted to Dr. Jarvis, with instructions to publish the list in the American Journal of Insanity.

Dr. McFarland read a very interesting narrative of the circumstances attending the insanity of four minors, near Bear Mountain, Ohio, and their recovery after two weeks, with the mental condition of the survivors.

Dr. Gray read a personal history of John Wesley Lavman, a homicide, who killed Commodore Cannon in 1856, near Fort Hamilton, L. I. This individual was regarded by the writer, and other members, as one of a class of insane persons who are generally considered sane, but which liberty always exposes to danger the lives of every person with whom they may accidentally come in contact.

Dr. Ray read a report of last year, to repeat upon the medical treatment of insanity, and a paper upon that subject, which elicited a general and protracted comparison of views, calculated to promote uniform and enlightened practice in the medical treatment of the insane.

Dr. McFarland, on behalf of the Committee to recommend time and place of the next annual meeting of the Association, reported in favor of holding it at Quebec, on the third Tuesday in July, 1858, which report, on motion of Dr. Kirkbride, was laid upon the table.

Dr. Ray read a paper on the Prognosis of Insanity.

Copies of the report of the trial of Hopkinson were presented to the members of the Association, by his counsel, to whom thanks were duly returned.

The Association then resolved that the next meeting should be held at Quebec, on the second Tuesday of June, 1858, at 10 A. M.

They then adjourned to Thursday morning, when the members visited the Asylums of Blackwell's Island, and, experiencing pleasant hospitalities at each place.

Board of Education.

The Board of Education held a regular meeting on Wednesday evening, Ambrose S. Gardner, Esq., President, in the Chair.

After the usual preliminaries, a number of applications from the local Boards for appropriations were received and referred to appropriate Committees.

A communication from the City Superintendent was submitted and ordered printed. The following are the leading statements in the CITY SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

A report was received from the City Superintendent, specifying in general terms the progress and results of the annual examinations of the several Schools, just completed. These examinations were commenced early in October last, and have been steadily prosecuted from that time to the present, under the charge of the City Superintendent, Mr. Randall, and his Assistants, Messrs. Kipman, Jones and Seaver. The general result has been highly satisfactory, and the general schools have found in good condition and making commendable progress. Detailed statistics of the examinations have been prepared, and such reports will hereafter be reported to the Board monthly, during the progress of the examinations.

The Superintendent calls the attention of the Board to the importance of a revision of the course of studies prescribed for the several schools, and of the text books in use, to the expediency and propriety of opening the schools during the Summer months at 8 o'clock A. M., and closing them at 4 P. M., and to the importance of a more systematic and efficient course of physical training and exercise in the several schools, as conducive to the health as well as intellectual improvement of the pupils.

The communication was ordered to be printed, and so much of it as related to a change of hours of opening and closing the schools, referred to the Committee on By-Laws.

A communication was received from Thomas B. Stillman, Chairman of the Commission to examine into the condition of our City school system, and, on motion of the Secretary a Select Committee of five, consisting of Messrs. Weatherby, Tweed, Rockwell, Boles and Hooper, was appointed to consider and report the proper action on the part of the Board of Education in relation to the communication of the Commission.

A communication was received from Mr. Robert S. Hasy, Financial Clerk of the Board, tendering his resignation of the place he has held for the past five years, on account of continued ill health.

A very large number of reports was submitted by the Finance Committee, Judge Waterbury Chairman, and finally disposed of.

The Committee on Supplies reported their awards for supplying fuel for the use of the schools; a synopsis of which was published some days since in the Times.

The President submitted two reports of the close of the City Normal School, and one in relation to the Female Academy for Girls from the Special Committee, and one in relation to the President's remarks in his annual address, concerning the punctualness of your children. Both were ordered printed, as was a minority report of Mr. Nelson on the Female Academy for Girls.

The Board turned off a great amount of old business and made amends for much time heretofore wasted on Buncombe speeches.

Mr. Bergen's report was made the special order for the second Wednesday in June next, and the Board adjourned to its regular meeting on the first Wednesday in June.

The New Code Commissioners.—David Dudley Field, William Curtis Noyes and Alexander W. Bradford, who were appointed, at the last session of the Legislature, Commissioners "to reduce into a written and systematic code the whole body of the law of this State, or so much and such parts thereof as shall seem to them practicable and expedient," have held several meetings as such Commissioners, they all having duly qualified for that office. The law provides that the work shall be divided into three portions, the criminal, the political, and the civil, and the penal code. Of these divisions, Mr. Field has undertaken the first, which is to include the laws respecting the government of the State, its civil polity, the functions of its public officers, and the political rights and duties of its citizens. It is the intention to make this an entirely separate part of the work, making a volume by itself. Mr. Field is also to make a "general analysis" of the three codes. Mr. Noyes undertakes the penal code, which is to define all the crimes for which persons can be punished, and the punishment for the same. Mr. Bradford will attend to the civil code, which is to embrace the laws of personal rights, and relations of property, and of obligations. Under the first of these divisions will come the laws relating to executors and administrators to intestates, the domestic relations, &c. The act provides that no portion of either of said codes shall embrace the courts of justice, the functions or duties of judicial officers, nor any provisions concerning actions or special proceedings, civil or criminal, or the law of evidence, all these being already treated of in the code of procedure and pleadings.

The Commissioners are to hold office for five years, and receive no compensation whatever. Not even provision for the necessary clerk hire is made by the act. The Commissioners are to report to the Legislature, after completion, a general analysis of the codes proposed by them, which analysis will be prepared by the Commissioners, that the progress made by them therein. This latter they are to do at every subsequent session. The act also provides that when the Commissioners shall have prepared the codes, or any portion of them, they shall enter into a contract with the printers for the State Departments for the printing of the same, and order the same to be distributed among the Judges and other competent persons for examination; after which the Commissioners shall reconsider their work, and consider such amendments as may have been made to them. They shall then report the same, as finally agreed upon by them, to be reprinted, under the contract aforesaid, and to be distributed to all the Judges of the Court of Appeals, Supreme Court, Superior Court and Common Pleas of the City of New-York, and to all the County Judges, Surrogates and County Clerks, six months before being presented to the Legislature, and the penal code to be distributed in like manner to the District Attorneys of the several counties of this State.

It so happens that the three distinguished jurists who compose the Commission are Republicans. The bill creating them was, however, introduced by Senator Bennett, and was passed unanimously by the Senate, and nearly so by the Assembly, being there only opposed by Judge Tuck.

Cleaning the Streets—Use of Dirt Carts.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Sir: I see that the last new obstacle to the cleaning of the streets is the want of a sufficient number of carts to carry off the dirt. Gracious! they must be a big species? It would be almost as efficient as those little tippenny carts used, which usually spill about little they have taken aboard, and thus distribute it again before they reach the dumping place. Isn't it complimentary to somebody (I suppose nobody in particular is responsible) that those miserable, contemptible pretences of carts have been in use so long, and are still in use, for this purpose? And isn't the economy of their use admirable? A man and a horse taking up their little pack of dirt and marching off with it a mile or two, as if they were doing something? These carts would seem to be specially designed upon the plan of doing as little as possible. And it may be safely said that whoever undertakes a contract of cleaning the streets, and continues the use of these wheelbarrow carts, does not intend to fulfill his contract further than to get his pay and give his receipts. The whole thing is a transparent humbug.

Let me say one thing more. We have frequent committees of our Common Council visiting Boston and other cities, to see their institutions, and what improvements of police and other they can incorporate into our own, (though what they ever brought back I have not been able to discover,) and I have sometimes wondered that from Boston, which, whatever else may be said of it, keeps itself tolerably clean—(and we might permit ourselves to take a useful hint in this matter even from a provincial city)—that they have never brought back at least a copy or a working draught of their improved carts in use for this purpose. But really, Mr. Editor, and seriously, is it not time that the shameful imbecility of New-York in this matter should be ended? Not wishing to make too long a communication at this time, I will, with your leave, return to the subject in a few days.

Your most obedient servant,

ANTI-HUMBUG.

The Last Crop of Ice.—This indispensable luxury will be abundantly supplied during the coming Summer, and of an unusually fine quality, but at a much higher cost than last season. The Ice Company have adopted the following scale of prices for family use, which we compare with that of the previous year:

1857.	1856.
12 pounds	14 pounds daily	6 cents
20 pounds	25 to 25 pounds, daily	9 cents
30 pounds	35 pounds daily	12 cents
50 pounds	65 pounds daily	20 cents
100 pounds	100 pounds daily	35 cents

Last Winter's "catch" of ice was remarkably fine, and the Kickerbocker and New-York (the only Companies now) have filled every foot in their storing houses. The ice varies from 10 to 22 inches in thickness, averaging 14; and half of it measuring 18 inches. In view of these facts it would seem that the price ought to have been reduced rather than increased; but the Company may that experience shows that they lose too much by breakage and melting to leave a margin for a profit at the old prices, at least where it is sold in small quantities. Another reason for the rise is the fact that a monopoly supplies us.

Alleged Murder on the High Seas.—A letter was received yesterday by the U. S. District Attorney from Mr. A. P. Salt, U. S. Consul at Antwerp, announcing the examination before himself of Robert Elbertson, first mate of the Benjamin M. Aymar, upon a charge of having murdered Frank Browne, and Thomas Barnetts, two of the crew of the vessel. The murder was stated to have been committed during the voyage of the Benjamin M. Aymar from New-York to Antwerp. The accused was placed in irons on board the Troy, which vessel arrived yesterday at this port. Elbertson was handed over to the U. S. Marshal, and immediately committed to Eldridge-street Jail to await trial. Captain Sawyer and the crew of the Benjamin M. Aymar, who will appear as witnesses against Elbertson, are daily expected to arrive in their vessel, which left Antwerp shortly after the Troy. Both the sailors said to have been murdered belong to this City, and have families living here.

Blowing.—By the official announcement of the United States Marshal, parties claiming the alleged slavers, Merchant and Ellen, were to have filed their claims prior to this day or the Judge of the United States District Court would to-day announce their forfeiture to the Government. So yesterday parties, claiming to be owners of each of the vessels named, filed their claims. They were Thomas Coslin for the Merchant, and J. P. Weeks for the Ellen. Mr. Weeks it will be remembered, was lately tried and acquitted on a charge of getting out the slaver Porcheita.

The Angoline, mentioned in the Times a few days since as suspected of being a slaver, has been sold. Her former cargo was taken out, and she has gone on a legitimate voyage to the West Indies. The District-Attorney compelled the owners of the vessel to make the sale, under the threat of seizing her if there were any hesitation.

☞ At the annual meeting of the officers of the Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb on Tuesday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

What Constitutes a Bushel?—The Corn Exchange is disturbed by the recent State legislation. It has been customary to allow 56 pounds of corn to the bushel, and sellers generally refuse to give more. However, by an act passed during the late session of the State Legislature, and which was to have taken effect on the 16th ult., it was decreed that 58 pounds of Corn should thenceforward constitute a bushel. Most buyers contend for this amount. Between the conflicting views, there is, at present, no approach towards a compromise, while the maintenance of the dispute completely interrupts operations.

☞ We should think stage-owners might afford to keep their vehicles in water-tight condition. Some of them leak like a riddle reminding one of old somebody's definition of a sponge—"a bundle of holes." Is there not an implied warranty in the contract between stage-owners and their passengers that the stages shall be tenantable and in decent repair? At present many of them would better serve the purpose of traveling baptising machines or contrivances for sponging conies than anything else. We appeal to the owners whom the late bad weather has probably put in a good humor to vent a little of it in repairing their stages.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

United States District Court—Nos. 22, 32 to 37, 38, 31, 39, 40, 323.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—May 21.

Before Judge Inglis.

Francis Swift, mate of the ship Andrew Foster, was put on trial, to day under two indictments, one for cruel and unusual punishment, and one for assault with intent to murder. There were three witnesses for the prosecution, and four for the defence, and the jury, without leaving their seats, found a verdict of not guilty.

Judge Roche appeared for the defendant.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—May 21.

Before Judge Betts.

At the opening of Court this morning, the suits brought by the United States to forfeit the schooner Merchant and the brig Ellen, the latter engaged in the slave trade, were called, and Mr. Roberts, on behalf of the claimants, prayed for an immediate trial, as the vessels were in custody of the Marshal, at large expense.

The District-Attorney, however, was not ready, and a somewhat sharp discussion ensued. Judge Betts finally postponed the trial till Thursday next.

The Quarantine Injunction.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term.—May 21.

Before Hon. Charles Clark.

Arguments against the Injunction—Rights of Taxpayers.

David Van Nostrand vs. Obadiah Bowne, et al., Commissioners, &c.—It will be remembered that a few days since we published an account of a temporary injunction which was granted by Judge Clerke, restraining the defendants from erecting any buildings, &c., on Staten Island Point. The hearing of the motion to grant a permanent injunction was had yesterday morning, for the plaintiff, opened by reading the Quarantine act and the complaint, (which was published in the Times on May 16,) and then rested.

Mr. Noyes said that he appeared for the Attorney General, in opposition to the motion, and proceeded to read the following affidavits:

Affidavits of the Commissioners.

State of New-York, City and County of New-York, ss.—Obadiah Bowne, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he is a resident of Clifton, in the county of Richmond and State aforesaid, and one of the commissioners appointed by the said to perform the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of New-York, "An act for the Removal of the Quarantine Station," passed March 6, 1857; that he is well acquainted with the value of lands in the county of Richmond, and specially of those whereon the present Quarantine buildings are now located; that such last-mentioned lands, in the judgment of this deponent, are worth at least the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars and upwards, any existing incumbrances thereon. And deponent further says that the preservation of the public health imperatively demands that the present Quarantine should be removed to some point more remote from the large and populous cities of New-York and Brooklyn, and that such removal should be effected at the earliest moment, not extending beyond the fifteenth day of June next. And further deponent says not.

OBADIAH BOWNE.

Sworn before me this 18th day of May, 1857.

EDMUND ELLENBORF, Jr.,
Commissioner of Deeds.

State of New-York, City and County of New-York, ss.—Egbert Benson and George Hall, being severally duly sworn, do severally depose and say, that they are respectively Quarantine Commissioners and exercising the duties of the office as such; that they have read the affidavit of Obadiah Bowne, another of the said Commissioners, herein annexed, and severally believe the same to be true, and that in their opinion, from a personal knowledge of the property therein mentioned, the same is worth more than the sum of money therein stated; that during the last Summer, the Yellow Fever raged at and near the present Quarantine station, and on the opposite coast of New-Jersey, and in Brooklyn, some three or four miles in extent; and that the same was communicated to those places from vessels lying at Quarantine, or by other means; and that a repetition of such visitation is likely to take place during the ensuing Summer, greatly to the injury of the health and lives of the inhabitants of those places, unless the Quarantine station shall be removed or other stringent means be taken to prevent it; that the Commissioners of Quarantine did not advertise for proposals during one month for the erection of temporary accommodations, authorized to be erected by the 21st section of the act under which they are acting; first because in their discretion they did not believe that the same could safely and properly be done, having regard to the short time they had for making the said temporary accommodations, and to the emergency of the case, and security because they did not understand or believe that the requirements of the 6th section of said act, even if they were positive, applied to the said first section, and from the belief that the notice they deemed the time given with notice set out in the complaint in this action sufficiently long to enable all who wished to make offers to do so, and to compete for the said work with any other person or persons who should offer to perform the same; that the injunction in this action is productive of great injury to the public interests committed to their charge, as they verily believe, and highly detrimental to the public interests, and further they say not.

EGBERT BENSON,
GEORGE HALL.

Sworn before me, this 21st day of May, 1857.

Wm. H. Duryee, Com. of Deeds.

Mr Noyes offered the certificate of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Comptroller, directing the Commissioners to proceed with the erection of the temporary buildings.

Mr. Lot C. Clark, for the plaintiff, stated that he had received no copy of these affidavits, and had not seen the certificate of the Governor. He demanded time to put in counter affidavits.

Mr. Noyes denied the plaintiff's right to put in counter affidavits.

The Court thought that the plaintiff had no right to put in their counter affidavits, unless new matter was set up in the affidavits of the defendants. He stated that the decision of the court yesterday was, that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction, unless new matter was set up in the affidavits of the defendants, and that the court would hear the motion upon the facts, he would proceed immediately.

Mr. Noyes thought that according to the well-settled practice, they had no right to introduce counter affidavits, as he had set up no new matter.

His Honor remarked that he had frequently allowed new affidavits to be put in, and he thought that this liberty was, in a great manner, discretionary with the Court. But in this case he considered it not necessary, and as it was a case of great importance, and time was of value, he should deny the motion.

Mr. Clark concluded to waive his claim, and proceed with his argument.

By the Quarantine act, said he, the Commissioners are under obligations to put out the contracts at public auction to the lowest bidder, except so far as that general provision may be controlled by the clause "so far as that may be safely and properly done." Does this throw the matter entirely open to their discretion? Certainly not. It would nullify the whole intent of the provisions requiring every contract to be given to the lowest bidder at public auction.

The complaint is filed by the plaintiff, who is a taxpayer, on behalf of himself and all other tax payers, asking an injunction against the defendants, who are Commissioners appointed for the removal of the Quarantine, to restrain them from making contracts for the erection of hospitals, fences and docks, without advertising and selling them at public sale, as required by the sixth section of the act under which they are appointed. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants, in violation of said sixth section, are proceeding to put out such contracts by private agreements, without first advertising, and without putting them up at public auction. The sixth section of said act is as follows:

The contracts for the erection of each and all of the wharves, docks, offices, hospitals and warehouses, and the furnishing of the hospitals for the same, contemplated by this act, and also of the fixtures for the same, so far as it can safely and properly be done, shall be let at public auction to the lowest bidder, after having been duly advertised for one month in three daily papers in the City of New-York, in one daily paper in the County of Kings, and in one weekly paper in the County of Richmond.

We therefore claim:

First—That the language of the act is plain and explicit, requiring the contracts to "be let at public auction to the lowest bidder." The Commissioners get their authority from this act, and are to pursue it strictly. The words "so far as it can safely and properly be done" gives them a discretion only as to the details and mode of conducting the auction, but do not authorize them wholly to disregard the spirit of the section. Such a construction would be to leave the whole matter open to their discretion, and would render the section an absurdity.

Second—In construing this statute, the object should be to ascertain the intention of the Legislature. It evidently was to secure a fair competition for the contracts after due public notice, and to prevent the Commissioners from giving them to favorites, or speculating in them as they otherwise might do. A similar provision is found in the charter of the City of New-York, and its object was to close the door against favoritism, fraud and private speculation, and thus to secure the public rights.

Third—If this construction of the sixth section be correct, then the Commissioners are proceeding in palpable violation of its provisions, to put out the contracts without the requisite notice or auction, and should be restrained. No injury can accrue from requiring a strict compliance with the statute, but much harm may arise from the loose course they have adopted.

Fourth—The Commissioners are also violating the twenty-first section of the act, which requires them to "provide temporary accommodations upon or near Sandy Hook." They are not authorized to provide such accommodations elsewhere, yet they propose, and unless restrained will, make their contracts for such accommodations at Seguine's Point, which is about two miles from Sandy Hook.

This is a statute creating new officers and conferring special powers, and should be construed strictly.

Fifth—It is the well settled law in this district, that any tax payer may commence an action on behalf of himself and all other tax payers, to restrain public officers from committing an act which will work mischief to himself and those for whom he prosecutes. Adriance vs. The Mayor, &c., 1 Barb. 16; Christopher, &c., vs. The Mayor, &c., 12 Barb. 567; Milhau vs. Sharpe, 15 Barb. 193; De Baum & Taisle vs. Mayor, &c., 16 Barb. 202; Stuyvesant vs. Pearsall, 15 Barb. 244; Roosevelt vs. Varnum, 13 How. P. R. 469; Shepard vs. Wood, 18 How. P. R., 50; Wood vs. Draper and others. Justice Davies' opinion.

In any aspect of this case, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, and the defendants should be restrained during the pendency of this action.

Mr. Noyes presented the certificate from the Governor, and continued as follows:

The first question is whether a general tax payer of the State at large, can maintain an action against the officers appointed by the Executive, to restrain them, by injunction, from performing their assigned duties. A tax payer of a municipal corporation may, in cases where the property of the city is in danger, under numerous decisions of this district, procure an injunction; but further than this no court has allowed a tax payer to proceed, though we were in the midst of a rain of injunctions. There are, however, remedies provided;—the officer may be indicted and removed for malfeasance. The consequence of allowing such a suit would be to allow any State tax payer, who contributed the sum of ten cents to the State Treasury, to interfere with every performance of the duties of officers which did not meet his opinion of being properly conducted.

Judge Clerke—What is the principle of the case cited? Is it not that the complainant has an interest in the pecuniary affairs of that body to which he pays taxes?

Mr. Noyes—No, Sir. A tax payer in a city is a member of what may be called a quasi private corporation with limited powers. Shall officers of the executive arm of the government, or any other executive persons have such the private suits, in a civil Court, prosecuted against in the name of the [illegible] leading to the [illegible] of every [illegible] Hall in example? Now does this relate under the sections of the Code applicable thereto.

Here followed some rather humorous [illegible] which can hardly be digested by the [illegible] man. Whether the location on Staten Island, within ten miles of Sandy Hook, was within the bounds prescribed by the act, they (the Judge) thought at quite a long Sandy Hook.

Mr. Noyes proceeded to speak upon the other questions presented. All the positions drawn by counsel in reference to Quarantine, and any grievance to that alone. The eighth section, however, shows that, under discretion is left with the Commissioners. The time spent in advertising, making the contracts, &c., would have occasioned so much loss that the public health would have been imperiled before the evil, which it was attempted to arrest, would have been upon us. It was for this reason that the law provides that discretion should be given to the Commissioners. Discretionary powers in regard to the temporary buildings.

Mr. Clark followed in reply, but urged no new points. He considered the direction to advertise as obligatory, and binding on all the contracts, whether for the permanent or the temporary buildings.

His Honor took the papers and will render his decision at the earliest possible moment.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term.—May 21.

Before Hon. Justice Roseboth.

THE BOWEN AND MCNAMEE LIBEL SUIT—MOTION TO DISMISS THE COMPLAINT.

R. G. Fowles vs. Henry C. Bowen, of the firm of Bowen & McNamee.—This case was continued yesterday morning. The evidence was mostly documentary. Mr. Andrews for the defendant.

Mr. Emmet was called to prove that a Mr. Nicholas Carter is now in Europe.

After some discussion Mr. O'Conor read the deposition of Mr. Carter, by which it appeared that Mr. Carter became acquainted with the plaintiff through a letter from Cork, Ireland, and that he (Carter) introduced him to Messrs Stewart, in whose employ he remained for about a year and a half, and then went to the employ of Bowen & McNamee. He remained there some time, and Carter called on the firm to ascertain if he would be warranted in giving Fowles letters of recommendation to his friends in Cincinnati. Bowen & McNamee both stated that he, Carter, would be justified in giving such letters, as the conduct of Fowles had been perfectly satisfactory while he was in their employ.

David M. Mellis was called to prove that Henry L. Stone was a member of the firm of Bowen & McNamee in 1851, but he did not know his handwriting, or that of Mr. Bowen.

When the plaintiff rested, Mr. Evarts moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that sufficient evidence had not been produced to sustain the charge. He spoke at some length, commenting upon the evidence, and attempting to show that whatever was said by Mr. Bowen, was merely what, as an honorable business man, he was bound to say, and that unless special malice were shown, could not be considered libelous. This he denied had been done, and, therefore, the plaintiff had failed to sustain his case.

Mr. O'Conor replied, also at length, claiming that the language was prima facie libelous, and of the most intense kind; that the evidence was sufficient to infer malice, at least to warrant its going to the Jury. They had a right to infer malice from the fact that Mr. Bowen did not believe the statement made in regard to the plaintiff, as was proved by his giving a letter of recommendation to the plaintiff.

Mr. Evarts replied, claiming that the just inference was that the first letter was given in good nature or carelessness, and that when the defendant found mischief was likely to grow out of it, he stated the real facts of the case, as in honor he was bound to do.

His Honor remarked that it was no part of his purpose, nor would it be suitable for him to say whether the words, with the previous case of the defendants, were libelous. That was to be left for the Jury. He was simply to say whether the case was such as would make it the duty to submit the facts to the Jury—leaving the counsel to give their views, and the Jury to decide, on those facts. He would only speak of the words as actionable in themselves, and say that he was of the opinion that there were questions of fact which would render it best to submit the whole case to the Jury. He should assume that the communication was a privileged communication. But this communication was inconsistent with the previous action of the defendant, and it was for the Jury to reconcile the two. It was, therefore, impossible for the Court to decide that there was nothing for the Jury to decide upon, with the motion.

[illegible] in favor, and could be at any time discharged [illegible] person attempting to applaud, he should exercise his power in punishing for contempt. That he knew of no greater insult which could be offered to the Court, than such demonstrations. The Court then adjourned until this morning at 11 o'clock.

SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Roseboth.

DECISIONS.

Ross vs. Andrews & Denton.—Bill of exceptions settled.

Young et al vs. Bushnell.—Motion denied, with $7 costs, to abide event, with leave to renew motion on sufficient papers.

Turn vs. Turn.—Unless the costs are adjusted, and $50 in addition are paid within five days after service of order to be entered herein, then on an affidavit of such service of such order, and of a return to the [illegible] and the papers before the Court on this motion, an attachment may issue.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—Special Term—May 21.

Before Judge Rudy.

DECISIONS.

Alexander Stuart vs. Alanson Marsh.—Judgment for the plaintiff on demurrer, with liberty to defendant to answer within twenty days, on payment of costs.

Richard Harrington vs. L. L. Lombard.—Judgment opened so far as to enable defendant to interpose his defence. Judgment to stand as security, &c.

P. F. Renard vs. Wm. H. Blakefield.—Referred to Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr.

Joseph E. Isaac vs. Walter Gorham.—Motion denied, with $7 costs, to abide event.

E. R. Hallam vs. Isaac Rys.—Motion denied.

The Worth-street Murder—Dorsey Convicted.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before the City Judge.

The trial of Dorsey, the negro charged with killing the girl Hopkins, in Worth street on the 10th March last, was resumed yesterday morning. A murder trial is surcharged with interest for half the idle people of the City. Consequently the Court-room was so closely packed with anxious spectators, that ingress or egress was next to an impossibility.

The prisoner was directed to put on the blue coat found in his room. The Jury examined it, and found on the shirt traces of blood. Mr. Woodruff, the junior counsel for the prisoner, addressed the Jury, objecting principally to circumstantial evidence. Mr. Busted followed. He argued that the deceased might have committed suicide, or that the other colored man, Wilson, whose room adjoined that occupied by Dorsey, might have been the murderer. Or, if the prisoner could be shown, beyond all doubt, to be the murderer, still it was proved that he was intoxicated at the time, and was not fully amenable to justice for the heinous crime of murder. If the Jury should so conclude, they might find him guilty of manslaughter.

The District-Attorney addressed the Jury on behalf of the people, reviewing the evidence of the witnesses, at length. At the close of Mr. Hall's speech, Mr. Busted requested the Court to charge the Jury on the following points:

1. Wilson was a bad man, as the officers of the Ward had often arrested him on suspicion of various crimes.

2. That in a case depending on circumstantial evidence, all the circumstances of the case, constituting links in the chain necessary to convict, must be as fully proved as though each circumstance were the sole issue in the case.

3. The whole of the circumstances, when put together, must establish beyond all doubt the guilt of the prisoner.

4. It is not enough that the circumstances are consistent with guilt; they must be inconsistent with innocence and exclude every other hypothesis than that of guilt.

5. That while intoxication may be under circumstances no excuse for a criminal act, yet if the Jury believe, as the public prosecutor insists, that the prisoner was intoxicated at the time of going to bed on the night of the homicide, they have the right to consider the circumstance as repelling or disproving the idea of cunning or ingenuity on his part in shaking off evidence or concealing the traces of his guilt.

6. That if the Jury believe, as the public prosecutor insists, that the prisoner was intoxicated on going to bed on the night of the homicide, they have the right, and are bound to consider whether that circumstance would not enable the author of the crime to surround the prisoner with suspicious facts or appearances of guilt, and put upon or about the prisoner indications of guilt, which if the prisoner had been perfectly sober could not have been done. In other words, if the real author of the murder may not have taken advantage of the prisoner's intoxication to draw off suspicion from himself and fasten it on the prisoner.

7. That it is for the Jury to say how far the prisoner's intoxication, if it existed, would have rendered it impossible for him to have committed the murder without detection in the act of leaving therein behind him, pointing home guilt to him.

The Judge then charged the Jury. He bade them remember that on their verdict depended life or death of the prisoner. There could be no compromise for the minor offence of manslaughter, and if there were reasonable doubts, he would give the accused the benefit of the doubt. In doubt he would not pronounce a conviction of his guilt, they must be satisfied that the testimony adduced excluded the idea of his innocence.

The Judge then reviewed in detail the evidence of the police officers. He was very strong against the witnesses, but still left room for doubt, from what were called corroborating circumstances. There was the testimony of the Barrett sisters, Mrs. Hall and Green, that the every appearance and conduct of the offender, on coming for defence, had proved that Wilson stood a more guilty light than Dorsey,—but such was not the fact. Dorsey's own witnesses testified that Wilson was at home for nearly a week after the affair, whereas Dorsey did not come in till about one hour after. In regard to Dorsey's intoxication, Wilson proved that he was strong enough to enter his Children's room, get down a conversation and carry directions as to where the light was put out. He also saw Dorsey with a black handkerchief, which resembled that found on the place, and the blade had "nicked" in it, exactly the point, and similar things in the blade of the razor shown in Court, and the witness's parentage entitled to his having threatened revenge on a woman.

If the non-presence of mind to quibble the question of motive. The motive was hatred from the act. Though the evidence was only circumstantial, it was as strong as a case of circumstantial evidence as was ever presented to a Court of Justice.

Another theory of the defence was, that the woman had committed suicide. If she had, then, after cutting her throat in two places, either wound being sufficient to produce death, she must have thrown the blade of the razor on the roof of the house, repassed Dorsey's window, have passed the room, marked with blood, in his overcoat pocket, and have lain down to die. If the Jury thought that the testimony was in favor of the supposition that she had committed suicide, they would acquit the prisoner; if they thought that the testimony bore more strongly against Wilson than against Dorsey, they would acquit the latter; but if they had no doubt of the guilt of Dorsey, it was their duty to convict him.

Mr. Busted excepted to that portion of the charge which stated that the motive of the accused was not to be taken into consideration.

The Jury retired, and were absent half an hour. On returning into Court, they found the prisoner Guilty.

On application of his counsel, his sentence was postponed till Saturday. The Court then adjourned.

THE COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Before Justices Osborne and Flanagan.

There was a large attendance in this Court yesterday. During the morning thirty-eight persons were arraigned upon charges of misdemeanor. Many of the assault and battery cases were disposed of by the magistrates finding the defendants guilty and suspending sentences. The following were punished for their offences by incarceration in the City Prison and confinement in the penal institution, at Blackwell's Island:

John Cooper, for stealing a pair of boots worth seven dollars from Jacob McLean, No. 143 Varick-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months. John is said to be an old offender, and received the full penalty for his crime.

Maurice Delaney, for stealing a pound of sugar worth eleven cents, from the possession of Roderick Reynolds, of the Schooner Joseph W. Webster, lying at Pier No. 2 East River, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for two months.

Ellen Agnew, for stealing wearing apparel, worth $2 50, from Anna Connor and Ellen Fritz, of No. 73 Duane street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for two months.

Catherine E. Bloom, for stealing a $2 bank note from Susan Eichberg, of No. 4 Jefferson-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for four months.

Luke Lahey, for striking John Burns in the face with a stone, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for three months.

Jeremiah Eldridge was found guilty of assault and battery on Carson Bloomer, clerk in a grocery and liquor store, corner of Greenwich and Robinson streets, on the night of the 15th inst. He quarrelled with Bloomer, who refused him liquor. He then went into the street, picked up a stone, and threw it at Bloomer, striking him in the head, and knocking him senseless to the floor. Eldridge was remanded to the City Prison for the present.

Conrad Gladden was fined five dollars for assaulting and beating his wife, Elizabeth Gladden, and committed to the City Prison in default of payment.

John Sweeny, a boy, was found guilty of stealing a decanter of brandy, and bank notes and silver coin, all of the value of five dollars, from James Dowling, No. 208 [illegible] avenue. He was sentenced to the House of Refuge.

James Kelly, for stealing three mantillas of the value of $7 50, from Joanna Nughent, of No. 43 Catharine-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months.

[illegible] was sentenced twenty days to the City Prison for [illegible] Johnston, of No. 207 [illegible]

[illegible] Bent, of No. 183 [illegible] of petit larceny, was sentenced to the City Prison for sixty days.

John Murray and John [illegible] were sentenced to the City Prison for sixty days, for an assault and battery on Jeremiah Beasley. McNamee was also convicted and fined $10 for assaulting George Morgan. He expressed to the City Prison to remain until the fine is paid.

On Monday last, Wm. F. Allen, mate on board the schooner Wm. Woodbury, fell overboard, and was drowned in the Rondout Creek. The unfortunate man was a resident of Fremont, Me., where he had a wife and child.

New-York Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1857.

Five Thousand Dollars Reward!

The Proprietors of the New-York Times hereby offer a reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS to any person or persons who will furnish them information which shall lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Dr. Harvey Burdell.

The Proprietors of the Times are prompted to this course by a profound conviction that the regular authorities of the City and State cannot be relied on, for such action as the interests of the people demand at their hands, and that the Public Press will in this instance, as in many others, be found the truest representative and most faithful guardian of the Public welfare. The action thus far taken by the officers of the law has signally revealed their utter incompetency and inability to prosecute such an inquiry as it should be carried on. The parties indicted for the crime have been acquitted by a Jury, and all further efforts to trace it to its authors seem to have been abandoned. The Mayor of the City alleges that he has no power to offer a reward for the discovery of the murderer. The Police and other municipal authorities seem to be too much engrossed in disgraceful struggles for power and patronage, to be able to give the requisite degree of attention to the protection of the lives of our citizens; and the Governor of the State has thus far given no indication of a purpose to exercise the power with which he is clothed to promote the ends of justice in this particular instance.

Under these circumstances, unless some action is taken by our citizens, this most horrible and atrocious crime is likely to pass unpunished;—our City must bear the reproach of permitting the most horrible atrocities to be perpetrated with entire impunity; the hundreds and thousands of abandoned ruffians who abound in all large cities are to learn, that any citizen may be assassinated in the most open manner, in his own room, surrounded by the inmates of his own house, in a street every foot of which is occupied by dwellings, at an hour when the almost silence prevails, and when any unusual noise would be the most likely to attract attention;—and that in spite of all these circumstances the assassin may continue to mingle with the mass of the community, and escape all suspicion of his atrocious guilt. It is the duty of all good citizens, who set a proper value upon the security of life and of property, and who feel any interest in the execution of justice and the prevention of crime, as well as any concern for the honor and reputation of the City, to do everything in their power to prevent such results.

The Proprietors of the Times are disposed, in the absence of proper efforts in other quarters, to take the lead in such a movement; and they accordingly offer the above reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS for such information, to be communicated to them in writing, as shall lead to the development of this mystery, and the detection, conviction, and punishment of the parties guilty of this murder. If any doubt shall arise as to the rightful claimant, the money will be paid upon the written award of a majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District.

The Proprietors of the Times reserve the right of withdrawing this offer whenever the authorities of the City or State shall take proper action calculated to accomplish the same result; and upon so doing they will, if requested by the parties, hand over to the said authorities whatever information may be elicited by this notice.

If any parties who may communicate information on this subject, desire that the fact of their having done so should be kept secret, their names will not be disclosed, without their consent. All communications in response to this offer, should be addressed; in sealed envelopes, marked "Private and Confidential," to the "Editor of the New-York Daily Times."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Niagara's mails from Boston reached this City last evening. Our London and Paris correspondence will be found to contain much additional news of interest. The dispute between this country and New-Granada is attracting great attention in Europe, and our position in the controversy is regarded by the French and English press as eminently just and proper, though opinions differ as to the means which should be adopted to obtain redress. We have received some more definite and circumstantial details respecting the French Mission to China. The appointment of Baron Gros as Extraordinary Commissioner, is officially announced. He is to demand a fresh treaty of commerce and reparation for the murder of the Abbe Chapdelaine. In the debate in the House of Commons on the address, in answer to the speech from the throne, Lord Palmerston made an exposition of his future policy. His speech, which we publish elsewhere, will be read with interest as it alludes to the leading political questions of the day. It is again reported, and with some show of authority, that the Spanish-Mexican difficulty is in a fair way of arrangement.

The Metropolitan Police Commissioners met yesterday at their new office, No. 90 White-street, and dismissed Mr. Matsell for insubordination, and appointed Daniel Carpenter, ex-Captain of the Fifth District, Deputy Superintendent in his stead. Mr. Matsell will be called upon to-day to surrender the books, papers, and other appurtenances of his office to Mr. Carpenter. This, he will, of course, refuse to do, and then the matter will be brought before the Courts in a new shape.

The Excise Commissioners have prepared a large number of printed blank applications for licenses. Yesterday they were being actively distributed among liquor dealers, for their filling up.

In the Board of Supervisors, a bill authorizing the Police Commissioners to appoint the same number of police patrolmen as were on duty before the new law went into effect, was laid on the table. The Board would not hear it read. A communication was received from the Corporation Counsel, relative to the duties and powers of the Board of Supervisors under the new act.

There was a resolution adopted in the Board of Aldermen, last evening, to appoint a Committee of five to consider the propriety of forming a Municipal Day and Night Watch, independent of the State authority and control, and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Mayor and Commonality of the City. A preamble and resolution proposing to give the Metropolitan Police Commissioners control of the station-houses and appurtenances, was presented by Alderman Owens, but the Board refused to hear them read. A resolution directing the Committee on Arts and Sciences to procure a portrait of George W. Matsell, to be hung up in the Governor's Room, was referred to that Committee. A communication was received from the Chief Engineer, asking for seventy-five thousand feet of hose.

In the Board of Councilmen, last evening, Councilman McCarrell offered a resolution to investigate into the accounts of various Departments of the City Government. It was laid over. The Board adopted a resolution of inquiry into the propriety of establishing a night and day watch in conference with the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter. Nothing else of importance was done.

The Committee of the Board of Councilmen on Cleaning Streets, met yesterday. They directed the City Inspector to proceed to the cleaning of the streets forthwith, which report will, doubtless, be adopted at next meeting of the Board.

The General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church met yesterday in the Jay-street church. The principal business transacted was the reception of reports from the various Presbyteries relative to the proposed basis of union with the Associate Presbyterian Church. Eight Presbyteries were in favor of adopting the basis without amendment, six suggested amendments which would make them more acceptable, while seven others would accept them only on conditions that certain specified sections should be amended. There is a full attendance of delegates and the probability is that their sessions will last over Sunday next.

The committee of twenty-three appointed from the Tammany Hall General Committee at their last meeting, to arrange a new plan of organization of the committee, was to have met last evening, at Tammany Hall, to agree upon their plan of government and line of future procedure. Only two members appeared. A sub-committee was to have made an important report at this meeting, but not one of the committee showed himself. What has happened, or what is going to happen?

The Eleventh Anniversary of the Society for the Relief of Destitute Children of Seamen, was held on Wednesday at their Asylum on Staten Island. The Treasurer's report gives the receipts of the Society for the past year as $6,850 23, and disbursements $5,137 82, leaving a balance in the Treasury of $1,215 41. There are at the present time, 128 children in the Institution. During the past year 55 children have been admitted and 31 removed.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States met at Cleveland, Ohio, yesterday and transacted some preliminary business.

A meeting of ship-owners and agents, called by a Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, resolved yesterday against several of the laws of the late Legislature, and to coöperate with the Mayor in resisting them.

In the Supreme Court, yesterday, the argument was heard in the case of the injunction against the Quarantine Commissioners, restraining them from erecting any buildings at Seguine's Point. The motive for asking the injunction is that the Commissioners did not advertise for contracts for the building, as the plaintiff claims is required by the act. No decision is as yet rendered.

In the Superior Court, the case of Fowles vs. Bowen, of the firm of Bowen & McNamee, is still in progress. The plaintiff rested, and the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the plaintiff did not prove sufficient facts to establish his case. The motion, however, was denied, and the case will go to the Jury.

The Habeas Corpus case of Sarah Jane Paulding, which was to have been tried yesterday, was adjourned until to-day.

The Jury yesterday, in the case of the negro Dorsay, charged in the Court of General Sessions with the murder of the girl in Worth-street, returned a verdict of guilty. He will be sentenced for execution on Saturday.

The Police War.

The new Police Commissioners yesterday removed Mr. Matsell, from the office of Deputy, to which they had before appointed him, and appointed Captain Carpenter in his place. To-day, we are informed, the new Deputy will wait upon the old one, and demand the surrender of all the books, papers, &c., appertaining to his office; and if they are not delivered up, application will be forthwith made to some proper Judicial officer for such action to compel a surrender, as is provided for in the sections which on Monday last we quoted from the Revised Statutes. There will undoubtedly be room in this case, as there is in every case, for legal quibbles, and such an exercise of professional ingenuity as may delay somewhat even the completion of so summary a process as this was designed to be. But we hope some Judge may be found who will consult the necessities of the City, and the exigency of the public good, as far at least as the technicalities of the law-books will permit. The case, however, will be relieved of some difficulties which have stood in the way of applying the same remedy to the higher class of offending officers. It might be doubted whether Mr. Draper is the legal "successor" of Mayor Wood, as the President of the Board of Police Commissioners, inasmuch as the latter held office under one law, and the former under another, so that the office, it might be urged, was not the same. But Mr. Matsell was appointed Deputy Superintendent, and Mr. Carpenter is now appointed his successor, under the same law; and if there is any force whatever in the provisions of the Revised Statutes for compelling the surrender of books and papers in such cases, it ought to become apparent here.

We trust that some judicial decision may be promptly reached by this process, not only because the public good requires it, but because the course likely to be otherwise pursued, falls with undue and unjust hardship upon the subordinate members of the Police Department. They are not in a position to know anything whatever of the legal merits of the controversy, which they are, nevertheless, called on virtually to decide. They are told by Mayor Wood that the new law is null and void, and that they must continue to obey his orders on penalty of immediate dismissal. On the other hand they are told by the new Board that the law is valid, and that they must not obey Mayor Wood's orders hereafter, under penalty of instant removal. All that they can know about the matter is, that whatever course they may decide to take is quite certain to involve their dismissal:—and as they and their families are entirely dependent upon their salaries for support, they may be excused for hesitating somewhat as to the choice they may be driven to make. It is not just or right, that they should be placed in such a position. The question of authority is one which should be settled by, or for, their Superiors in office: and until it is so settled the rank and file of the Department should not be required to take part in the controversy.

We have already expressed our own conviction,—and we believe it is that of the public also,—that the conduct of Mayor Wood in this whole matter is utterly and inexcusably wrong. He is acting in open defiance of every dictate of law and of common sense, and is setting an example which, if generally followed, would overturn all legal restraints and plunge our Society into a condition of permanent and remediless anarchy. He claims the right to disregard and resist by force a plain and unmistakable law of the State which he finds upon the Statute Book,—upon the ground that he thinks it will hereafter be decided to be unconstitutional. If he may resist this law, he may resist any other law upon the same ground. And if he may do it, every other citizen may do it, in this and in every other case. Upon such a theory there can be no such thing as valid and binding law, until all the Courts of the State shall have passed upon the validity and constitutionality of each separate enactment. And as no case can possibly arise for the Courts to act upon until after some act, or attempted act, under each enactment, we must of necessity have, in the case of each and every law, an indefinite period of time, between the date of its enactment and the final decision of the Courts concerning it, during which there is no law whatever! This is a manifest absurdity, contradicting common sense and the plain letter of the Constitution. That instrument declares that every law shall take effect at the date specified in its terms, or in default of such specification, twenty days after the date of its approval by the Governor. Mayor Wood's doctrine is that it does not take effect until the final decision of the Court of Appeals upon its validity. The Courts of law can undoubtedly correct erroneous legislation. They can arrest and annul the effect of unconstitutional enactments. But they do not give effect to those enactments, nor have they any right, or any chance, to interpose, until the actual operation and execution of those enactments shall have commenced. The State laws, one and all, are to be deemed valid and to be obeyed until deprived of their force by Judicial decisions. Any other theory deprives the laws of all validity except such as the Courts of law may confer upon them.

Nobody in this country has ever held the doctrine now openly announced by Mayor Wood, except the ultra and extreme nullifiers of the Fugitive Slave Law,—and even they base their resistance to law upon infinitely higher grounds than Mayor Wood. They claim the right to resist the law only when it comes in conflict with their conscientious convictions of duty. He asserts the right of resisting and annulling each and every law which he, or any body else, does not happen to approve. It was his duty, as a citizen, and especially as a high executive officer, to yield a prompt and unhesitating obedience to this law, and then take such steps as he might see fit to contest its constitutionality and validity. He would have acted thus if his conduct had been governed by regard for the public good.

What is to be the issue of this controversy it is not easy to see. But unless we are mistaken the course for the new Board to pursue is reasonably plain. The Board is authorized by law to appoint a general superintendent, two deputy superintendents and five surgeons of police, and for the City of New-York so many captains, not to exceed 40, so many sergeants, not to exceed 160, and so many police patrolmen as may be determined upon by the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York;—and they cannot appoint any more. Now the Board of Supervisors has determined upon the number of patrolmen who are to act "under the jurisdiction" of the new Board; and in so doing it has distinctly recognized, as we show in another article, the validity of the new law, and the legality of the new Board. In so doing it has of necessity recognized the exclusive jurisdiction of the new Board,—for the law under which the Supervisors themselves acted, and which they must of course regard as valid, declares that the power and authority of the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge as Police Commissioners "shall wholly cease and vest in the new Board" from the date of its first meeting. By the action of the Supervisors themselves, therefore, there is now no Police authority in this City except that of the new Board and the five patrolmen whom they have assigned to it. The new Board is bound to accept this action of the Supervisors, so far as we can see, and to act accordingly. It has no right to claim authority over the old force, or to appoint any more than five patrolmen, unless it goes beyond the letter of the law under which it acts. And on the other hand, neither Mayor Wood, nor a single member of the old Police, has a shadow of right to exercise police authority or to draw a shilling's pay for police services. The action of the Supervisors, while it has paralyzed the new Board so far as practical efficiency is concerned, has actually taken from the Mayor the last vestige of authority for the course he is pursuing.

As things stand now, Mayor Wood is at the head of an organized force in rebellion against the laws of the State. He is setting an example of lawlessness and of reckless hostility to the peace and order of the community, which cannot fail of its legitimate and mischievous effect upon the worst class of our population. If the courts of law have any power whatever to arrest this direct and rapid tendency towards anarchy, we hope it will be exerted. If they have not, and if Mayor Wood persists in heading an open and forcible resistance to the authority of the State, we see no other alternative but to call upon the Governor to perform the duty enjoined upon him by the Constitution, as the Chief Executive Officer of the State, and "take care that the laws are faithfully executed."

The Contest in Utah.

The public are rejoiced to hear that the Administration of Mr. Buchanan has determined to meet the issue tendered the Federal Government by Brigham Young and his deluded followers. A large force—we are advised from Washington—is ordered to Utah. We trust the announcement is correct, but would like some more definite information as to the contemplated movement. How large a force is ordered to the Plains? From whence is it to be drawn, and when will it march? If the movement is a fixed fact, and if it is intended to be executed this season, there should be some official promulgation of the purpose in Army orders. A week ago, we have reason to believe, no such movement was contemplated at present. At that date all the available troops were, by recent orders, disposed for other service during the ensuing Summer. Have these orders been countermanded? This Utah question is an earnest one; the necessity for prompt action by the Government is imminent, and public sentiment will not and ought not to sleep until something is done, and not merely promised.

Three weeks valuable time have been wasted in the effort to induce Major McCulloch to take the Governorship of Utah after he had signified his unwillingness to accept the place by declining it. And now the President waits again the decision of some mysterious individual in Indiana—whose name is not to be told—as to whether he will undertake to govern the Saints. Surely there can be no difficulty in obtaining a competent man to fill this place if a military force is to accompany him, however much objection the place-hunters might have to emigrating a contest with Brigham Young unsupported by such auxiliaries. It is sincerely to be hoped that some one may be selected immediately who is expected to accept, and that we may thus receive practical evidence that Mormon treason is to be punished and repressed. The cold Spring weather, fortunately for this occasion, has kept the grass upon the plains back at least a fortnight, so as to make the movement of troops across them practicable, that much later than usual.

Evidences are not wanting to show that Young contemplates an attempt to make good his oft-repeated declaration that he would maintain his rule in Utah, despite the General Government. He has long required every man of his flock to be provided with arms, and during the last few months has taken special pains to enroll the militia and subject them to the thorough drill necessary to fit them for actual service. Against whom is all this preparation? Certainly not a foreign enemy, for against such the mountains and the desert afford him the surest protection: and the Indians of the Plains never attack a settlement one hundredth part so strong as the Mormon City. And what means the recent calling into Salt Lake City of the faithful from San Bernardino, and all the other Mormon settlements, some of them hundreds of miles distant? Our judgment is greatly at fault if the sequel does not show that these movements look to an armed resistance of the Federal authority, in which Brigham Young is even now attempting to secure the aid of savage allies during his "pleasure trip" into the Indian Country. The fact that these rebels have become so bold in their treason, makes it doubly important that the issue with them should be met without further delay.

Salt Lake City, proper, does not contain probably more than ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, the larger portion of the "Saints" being scattered over the plain in a chain of small settlements, extending for hundreds of miles in either direction. The City itself covers an area of about six miles square, being divided into Wards, each occupying an isolated position, as though it were a separate and distinct town. Each of these sub-divisions is built in the form of a hollow square, on the outer edge of which are ranged the dwellings of the settlers. This plan of construction was adopted when the community of "Saints" was feeble in numbers, the better to resist attacks of hostile tribes of Indians; and being found well adapted to the peculiarities of the people and their religious and social life, no change is made now in the days of their prosperity. It will be seen from this statement that the city is peculiarly exposed to organized attack by a strong body of disciplined troops, should it be found necessary to proceed to extremities.

Street Splendors.

The Journal of Commerce, yesterday, published an account of many of the public and private edifices now in process of erection in various parts of the City, among which are churches, warehouses, stores, banking-houses, insurance offices, and private dwellings; they are in every conceivable, and some, of inconceivable styles,—Gothic, Greek, Roman, Lombardic, Elizabethan and Saracenic,—and composed of every conceivable material,—brick marble, iron, free-stone and granite. Among them are edifices of the very first class, of great cost and unequaled elegance. Although the Journal's catalogue does not include all the City improvements now going forward, yet the estimated cost of those it enumerated, amounts to the very large sum of six millions of dollars. But, to this enormous private expenditure for City improvements might be added the two millions of dollars to be expended upon the new City Hall, and the annual outlay of one hundred thousand dollars a year in improving the Central Park; and the cost of the new Croton reservoir. There will still be a wide margin left for other City improvements, such as new docks and piers, and an immense number of small buildings for the accommodation of the growing commerce of the port, so that the prospective annual expenditure for building purposes cannot fall much short of ten millions of dollars in this metropolis alone.

The Journal questions whether we are not building beyond our means, and fears that we are running ahead rather too fast. But there is very little cause for apprehension of ill consequences from our extravagancies in building. These are not the kind of splendors which bring ruin and commercial disaster upon a community. The greater part of the material used in erecting new buildings is of home production, and all the money expended for labor, which is a very considerable portion of the cost in all architectural undertakings, remains at home and increases the general prosperity. All the marble, free-stone, and the granite, come out of our own quarries, the bricks are made of our own clay, the greater part of the iron comes from our own mines, the timber comes out of our own forests, and the glass and the paints which are used in decorating these buildings are of our own manufacture; while they give employment to our own mechanics and artists, and lead to the development of the inventive genius of our people. There is no form of public or private extravagance that is so little to be deprecated as that which exhibits itself in building. The individual may be ruined by building beyond his means, but the community is not injured by his extravagance. For the ten millions of dollars spent in the erection of splendid buildings we shall have something to show for generations to come. The churches, stores, and private dwellings will be permanent conveniences for centuries, and remain as monuments of the intelligence and enterprise of the age. But the millions that we expend yearly for foreign trippery add nothing whatever to the national wealth. A tithe of what we pay for French finery, for laces, embroideries, and tinsel ornaments, which have no substantial value, would more than defray the cost of all of our public buildings, and convert our Metropolis into a City of palaces. Although there appears to be a recklessness of extravagance in the present style of architecture in both private and public buildings, we do not think there is any danger of a commercial revulsion being caused by excesses in this direction.

Nearly all the buildings now in process of erection are of an imposing character and highly ornamental in their appearance. On the front of one c[illegible] more ornamental [illegible] been found in the [illegible] and, if placed to[illegible] ranged so that they [illegible] followed together, they would, by them[illegible] a magnificent spectacle of architect[illegible] splendid additions [illegible] will greatly increase the beauty [illegible] City, and render it [illegible] over entitled to its appellation of the [illegible] City. Broadway is rapidly becom[illegible] Palmyra, and in [illegible] will not be many years [illegible] the entire extent of that great thorough[illegible] from Union-square to the Battery, will present a succession of superb façades of marble and free-stone.

The Board of Supervisors Recognize the New Police Law.—It is worthy of notice that the Board of Supervisors has distinctly and practically recognized the validity of the law creating the Metropolitan Police Commission. At its last Monday's meeting the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, By the sixth section of the act passed April 15, 1857, entitled an act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the Government thereof, the Board of Supervisors are authorized to increase or decrease the number of patrolmen for this County, who are to act under the jurisdiction of the Board of Commissioners thereby created; and whereas, the constitutionality of this law is in the course of being decided by the Courts; and whereas, the peace and good government of this City demand that no patrol force shall be organized by the Commissioners appointed under the said act of April 15, 1857, until a final decision is obtained as to their legal and constitutional rights to act as such; therefore, be it

Resolved, That until the further action of the Board of Supervisors, the quota of patrolmen for this County allowed to the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan District shall be five men, and no more.

Here the Supervisors, in the clearest and most explicit language, "allow to the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan District" a certain number of patrolmen for this County. Where do they obtain their authority for so doing? There is but one law on the Statute Book which gives them the slightest power or right to take any such action:—and that is the law creating this new Board. Indeed their own preamble cites this law, and bases upon its authority the action which they take. They declare that, inasmuch as this law authorizes them to fix the number of patrolmen who shall act under the jurisdiction of the new Board, they accordingly fix it at five. They thus acknowledge the validity of the law by exercising power which it confers; and they recognize the new Board of Police Commissioners, as having a legal existence, by placing a certain number of men "under their jurisdiction." What that number may be, is a matter of not the slightest importance at this stage of the controversy. The "allowance" of five is just as thorough and as complete a recognition of the new law as would be the allowance of five thousand.

It is true the Supervisors at the same time declared:

"That nothing in these resolutions shall be construed to interfere with the municipal police as organized and existing under laws passed previous to the year 1857."

But this amounts to nothing whatever. It may possibly stand as a protest against the law recognized,—but it cannot vitiate that recognition, nor in the least impair the effect and operation of the law under which their previous action was taken. It is that law which "interferes with the municipal police" by repealing the "laws passed previous to the year 1857;" and as the Supervisors have performed the duties which it enjoins upon them in connection with the new police, they have nothing further to do with the law in any shape. Their opinions, or protests, are of not the slightest consequence. The law imposed certain duties upon them, and these they have performed. There their agency in the matter ends.

The Grand Duke Constantine's Visit to England.—The first Russian Monarch that paid England the compliment of a personal visit went there to learn the unkingly art of ship-building, and it is quite natural that the descendant of that imperial mechanic, who, in spite of his low tastes, happens to be the only one of the race to whom the term Great has been applied, should regard England as the most eligible place to gain an insight into the mysteries of naval architecture. It is quite natural, too, that Englishmen should themselves imagine when a descendant of Peter the Great visits them, that he comes with the purpose of looking at the Dock Yards, rather than to visit the Queen at Windsor. We are not surprised, therefore, that the London Times should throw out the hint that the Grand Duke Constantine's intended visit was for the sole purpose of making a surreptitious survey of the ship-yards and arsenals of England. The Grand Duke is the high Admiral of the Russian Navy, and is said to be something of a sailor, though he certainly let slip the finest opportunity that Russia has ever enjoyed of trying the strength of her navy, since she possessed one; and it will be of little use for him to learn the art of building men-of-war if the only use they are to be put to is to sink them to prevent the enemy from coming into port and destroying them.

If Russia is still determined to name the chimera of a navy, she knows where ships can be obtained ready built at her hands, and Admiral Constantine knows, too, that some of the finest vessels in the Imperial Navy were constructed in New-York, where he might learn all that he can desire to know of the art, and be heartily welcome; and save himself from the trouble of ceremonious visits to the English dock yards. Fortunately for him, he will arrive in London about the same time that our noble steam frigate Niagara arrives in the Thames, and as there are on board of her two officers of the Russian Navy they will doubtless direct the attention of their Imperial master to her superior model. If he has half the energy of his great ancestor, and has a real design of placing the marine of Russia on a par with that of England and France, he will extend his journey Westward, and take a look at our method of creating a navy.

An Elder's Testimony.—Lest any should think the accounts of Mormon outrage detailed by our Salt Lake Correspondent exaggerated, we refer to the following extract of a sermon delivered on the 11th March by Elder Orson Hyde, and published in the Deseret News:

"No man or woman among us, not of our faith, that behaves himself and violates not our laws and regulations, has any occasion to fear molestation. But if he or she do violate them and will not desist, I cannot vouch for his safety, member of our church or not; neither can I answer his house to stand."

Here evidently is the justification for the [illegible] called by one [illegible] so [illegible] facts. If the [illegible] have his house burned, or suffer [illegible] penalty. What "laws and regulations" [illegible] and how is it proposed [illegible] laws? By the Courts? [illegible] suppressed by armed ruffians in open day, to bring them to justice for so flagrant an outrage not an effort is made: the penalties of which Elder Hyde speaks, are to be exacted by mob violence or secret assassination. His language is capable of no other construction, and the facts give vivid illustration of this interpretation. We have only to add in this connection, that the failure to receive by the mail train recently arrived at Independence, confirmation of the reports of violence, in no degree impairs confidence in them,—for it must be remembered that the mail contract is now in the hands of the Mormons, who are not likely to give publicity to anything calculated to excite prejudice here against their people.

Discouraging for Sugar Consumers.—In addition to the alarming intelligence of short crops from the sugar-producing Islands, and the monopolizing operations of sugar speculators in all parts of the globe where sugar is to be found, we have the still further discouraging news that the French Crédit Mobilier is about to purchase up all the best sugar-estates in the Island of Cuba. If that mammoth Company should succeed in getting possession of the sugar-plantations of the "Queen of the Antilles," we may as well give up all hope of ever again returning to the days of cheap sugar, and it would be as well for every housekeeper to see where a teaspoonful of sweetening can be dispensed with. We must eat less cake, fewer preserves, give our children fewer candies, take our pills without sugar-coats, eat our strawberries as natural, and drink our tea, as the Chinese do, without sweetening. It would require a very moderate degree of economy in the use of sugar by our housekeepers to bring down the price of the article in spite of short crops, speculators, and the Crédit Mobilier. And we are not sure that the general health of our people would not be improved by the change. We are, beyond question, the greatest sugar-consumers in the world, and many of our diseases may be attributed to too free a use of sweet food. Let there be an attempt made to bring about a moderate reformation in this respect. It will be certain to have a good financial effect if none other.

Dunes and Dumpsters.—The great exhibition of works of art in Manchester, which is now the most prominent topic of interest in the English papers, is composed of the finest specimens of art called from all the great private collections in the Kingdom. Among the contributors to the exhibition we notice the names of five Dukes, and a great number of Marquises, Earls, Viscounts, Lords, Baronets, and so on. Many of these works that have been so liberally loaned for the benefit of the people are beyond price; many of them are heir-looms and family portraits which money could not purchase. In this country collections of pictures are very rare, and there are but few which artists would consider worth studying. But there is in this City an exceedingly valuable collection of paintings of modern European artists, belonging to a gentleman who will not permit any one but the members of his own family to look at them. Young artists who have never been abroad and who have a strong desire to study some of the works of the great modern masters, have made frequent appeals to the owner of this collection of art treasures for the privilege of viewing them, in vain; they are shut out from all the world except their wealthy owner. Every man has a right to do what he likes with his own property, and, if the possessor of a large fortune chooses to pay an enormous sum for one of Turner's finest landscapes, and then put in his grate, or shut it up in a darkened parlor, who shall say him nay? Every man's house is his castle, and he has just as good a right to keep amateurs and artists from looking at his pictures as he has to keep out impertinent intruders of any kind. We do not desire that the domestic privacy of any man shall be invaded, on any pretext; but, in reading the list of the names of noble Dukes who had freely lent their art treasures to the Manchester Exhibition, we could not help thinking of the different spirit manifested by them from that shown by our own Democratic owner of similar works.

Two Ways of Looking at the Same Subject.—The Louisville Journal, in alluding to the offer of a reward for the discovery of the murder of Doctor Burdell, by the Daily Times, concludes that "it is a first-rate advertisement;" but the Louisville Courier looks upon the matter in a rather different light, and winds up a most commendable article on the recent outrage by the mob of Louisville with the following remarks:

"The Press is the conservator of the rights of the people, and must not shrink from its duties. These duties should be discharged fully and faithfully, with the direct object of promoting the welfare of the State and of the city. We are ready to do our part in these solemn responsibilities. The public Press should everywhere feel its important bearing upon society. A few months since the London Times set a notable example of the watchful care that should attend the suffering British troops upon a foreign soil, and by its deeds roused the Government to imitate the good example. And now, while we write, the New-York Times, after vainly struggling day after day to get the City and State authorities to offer a reward for the detection of the murderer of a citizen in his own dwelling, have themselves stepped forward and offered five thousand dollars reward for any information that may lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer. The press of Louisville has equally as grave responsibilities thrown upon its shoulders. We hope and believe that all its members will prove true to the trust and faithful to duty."

We alluded yesterday to the contrastive tone of the Journal in reference to the murder of the four negroes by the mob at Louisville, but we are very happy to find that all the papers of that city speak in the same earnest tone of condemnation of the outrage.

An Editorial Change.—Thomas Darcy Magee, Esq., the brilliant and zealous Editor of the American Celt, has left that paper and accepted the Editorship of a new weekly journal to be published in Montreal. In his closing address he reviews at considerable length his past political career, confessing his mistakes with frankness and showing an evident determination to profit by experience. While he ardently sympathized with the cause and claims of Ireland, he now regards the Irish rebellion of 1848 as a masterpiece of absurdity, and only wishes he had been able to see it in the same light eight years ago. He is satisfied also that he committed a grave mistake in permitting himself to be drawn into a controversy with the superiors of his Church upon the subject. He has done something to disabuse the public mind of its prevalent delusions concerning the Anglo-Saxon race, and since the Know-Nothing paroxysm he rejoices that he has never become an American citizen. This country, he says, is not the place for [illegible]

Rich Gold [illegible] which [illegible] people it was [illegible] and honest [illegible] who [illegible] new living in the [illegible] and a very [illegible] in the West. The body of a woman was found in the Mississippi, near St. Louis, last week, and in a pocket of her dress a letter, addressed "W. T. M., Sacramento City, Cal.," in which occurred the following:

"Mr Dear William: I now write to you for the last time. When you read this I will be no more. You have driven me distracted by your last unkind and unfeeling letter. I am tired of the lying tongues of slander, and the false tales that you have told about me. If I was not true and devoted to you, who on this earth is? I have been a faithful and true wife, and now you have driven me on to this cold world, and you cannot say that I ever gave you cause for me to lead the life of a fancy woman, for such was my life while living with you. But that I promence a lie, and those same low-lite women who told you so have sworn to a lie."

Obituary.

Musical readers will remember the Misses Shaw, who some years since were favorite vocalists. Mary, one of them, died recently in St. Louis of an affection of the heart; the other sisters are Mrs. Charlotte Howard and Mrs. Hoey, both well-known in the theatrical profession. The deceased always retained her maiden name in the stage, though twice married.

PITTSBURGH, FORT WAYNE AND CHICAGO RAILROAD COMPANY.

$10,000,000.

MORTGAGE BONDS CONVERTIBLE, $2,140,000 FOR CONSTRUCTION, $3,500,000 FOR REDEMPTION OF FUNDED DEBT.

Date, January 1, 1857. Principal payable January 1, 1907.

Interest at seven per cent, payable July 1 and January 1.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN NEW-YORK.

To provide means for the immediate completion and equipment of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad and for the redemption of the Funded Debt of the Ohio and Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, and Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Companies, respectively, maturing at different periods between Sept. 1, 1858, and July 1, 1862, the PITTSBURGH, FORT WAYNE AND CHICAGO RAILROAD COMPANY, now which owns these Companies, or substantially controls the Roads of the Companies, has authorized the issue of TEN THOUSAND BONDS, of which 2,500 of $1,000 each are known as Construction Bonds, and 4,250 of $1,000 each are known as Redemption Bonds, and are issued in the form of Coupon Bonds.

These Bonds are secured by a MORTGAGE IN TRUST to JOHN FERGUSON and THOMAS B. WALKER of New-York, covering the Company's Road of 468 miles, from Pittsburgh to Chicago, with all its Depot grounds, appurtenances and franchises, embracing the Railroad Bridge over the Allegheny River at Pittsburgh and depot grounds of great value in Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Alliance, Akron, Fort Wayne and other points.

The Mortgage provides for a Sinking Fund.

The Redemption Bonds will remain under the control of the Trustees, and be issued only from time to time, as they can be exchanged for, or are required to be sold to redeem the outstanding Bonds of the three Companies mentioned, with the privilege of such redemption now extended to holders of the Bonds, and their attention is especially invited to the advantages that will result alike to the Consolidated Company and themselves by such exchange.

The Construction Bonds are offered for sale to provide means to finish the Road between Plymouth and Chicago, to equip and put in working order and furnish it with a full stock of Rolling Machinery, Engine-Houses, Shops, Station-Houses, &c., the estimates for all of which are nearly $2,000,000.

The Capital Stock of the Company is fixed at $16,000,000. The present cost of the Road is about 12,000,000. The paid Capital is nearly 4,000,000. The funded debt occurred on the Road is 6,000,000. The mortgages of the Roads, which, since the consolidation, from the 1st of August, 1856, to the 1st of May, 1857, eight months, have been over $1,250,000. The net earnings for that time are at a rate of over 7 per cent on the entire cost of the Road. They are the earnings of an unfinished and but partially ballasted and equipped road.

The earnings for 1857 are estimated at $3,000,000.

The Road is operated for 322 miles, from Pittsburg to Plymouth, Indiana, where its business passes to and from Chicago over another more circuitous route of different gauge.

The 82 miles between Plymouth and Chicago are in progress of construction, and for advanced toward completion. Four thousand tons of American iron are purchased, 40 miles of track can be laid this season, and the whole work completed to Chicago within twelve months; after which the earnings will increase, as is believed, with the development of the business of the road, to a permanent income of $4,000,000 per annum.

The guarantee of this result are believed to exist in these facts:

1. The road has immense resources for local traffic in passengers and freights. It connects by the shortest line Pittsburg and Chicago, and passes through 34 counties and 14 county towns (including the Incorporated) the valuation of whose property for taxation purposes in 1856 exceeded $150,000,000—the counties embracing some of those the best developed and most productive in Ohio and Indiana, and the towns being among the most important centres of trade between Pittsburg and Chicago.

2. The road has over 30 lateral railway connections, bringing it in communication with the whole Western Railroad system—these connections conferring marked advantages to the road as a route of travel and large portions of its line from Chicago to Toledo, Cleveland and Buffalo, and from Pittsburg to Indianapolis, St. Louis, Cincinnati, &c. A reference to a map will more fully illustrate this point.

3. The Road is a single line, without branches, and the longest continuous Railroad in the United States, and for its whole length of 468 miles, part of a great central route, in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad, of 318 miles from Philadelphia to Chicago, and of 908 miles from New-York to Chicago, via Philadelphia, and on completion of the Allentown Road in Pennsylvania, of 805 miles only from New-York to Chicago, thus saving from 62 to 72 miles in distance via Philadelphia, and from 70 to 80 miles via Allentown, as compared with the great route through New-York—making it the shortest route of 796 miles via Harrisburg, between Baltimore and Chicago. In alignment and grades the entire line from Chicago to Philadelphia has marked advantages, no grades existing between Chicago and Philadelphia, going East, over 52 feet per mile. Between Pittsburg and Chicago no grades occur exceeding 47 feet per mile, and for 326 miles there are no grades over 26 4-10 feet per mile, and for more than half distance it is practically a straight line. The Road, therefore, must become one of the most important, if not the most important, PERMANENT avenues of American commerce, and its traffic will be limited only by its capacity.

4. The Road will be completed at a low cost, as compared with other leading through lines, and has corresponding advantages in grades, alignment, &c., for safe, speedy and economical operation, and easy and cheap maintenance.

A full Exhibit of the history, condition and prospects of this Road, with copies of the Bonds, Mortgages, Articles of Consolidation, &c., has been prepared and will be furnished for the information of parties desiring to invest in the Bonds.

The Company solicits a full investigation of the merits of this loan. It is offered as one in every respect worthy the attention of capitalists, and applications are now invited for the Construction Bonds, $150,000 of which have already been sold.

A subscription for $1,000,000 of the Construction Bonds, conditional on their being taken with the option to subscribers of taking $3,000,000 at the same rate, is open at the office of the Company, No. 37 William-st. (3d floor,) where all needful information will be furnished.

JOSEPH K. EDGERTON, Vice President.

Office of Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Company, No. 37 William-st., New-York, May, 1857.

OFFICE OF THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, New-York, April 3, 1857.—Notice is hereby given, that the Directors of the ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY have resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the Company, from One Hundred and Seventy Thousand Shares, to Two Hundred and Fifty-five Thousand Shares, which new shares will be allotted to the holders of the present stock, at the rate of one for each one then held, and to such persons as may become stockholders by the conversion of Optional Rights, which expire on the 1st day of January, 1858, in the proportion of one share of new stock, to two shares of the old stock.

The Transfer Books will be closed on the 20th day of June next, and reopen on the 1st day of July next.

The holders of the present Stock are required to receive the new shares to which they may be entitled on the 1st day of July, 1857, and to pay an instalment of $20 per share thereon. Optional Rights for the remaining two-thirds will be issued—one-half convertible into the stock of the Company, on or before the 1st day of February, 1858, and the remainder on or before the 1st day of July, 1858; such rights to be as may then have been called for, on the present Stock to be paid to the Company at the time of conversion.

Those persons who shall become stockholders by the conversion of the present Optional Rights into Stock, on or before the second day of January, 1858, and after the first day of July next, will be required to receive, and pay for one-third of the new stock to which they may be entitled, at the time of such conversion. Optional Rights for the remaining two-thirds of the new Stock to which they may be entitled, will be issued to them, of the same tenor as those issued to parties who shall appear as stockholders, at the closing of the books on the 20th June next.

Parties converting Optional Rights will be required to pay to the Company all accrued interest on the instalments from the time that interest shall have been paid on the instalments to the holders of the present shares.

All stock which is not applied for before the 16th day of July next, and the instalment paid thereon, will be forfeited to the Company, together with all rights which attach thereto.

The Directors have resolved to extend the time for the conversion of the existing Optional Rights, which, by their terms, expires on the 1st of January, 1858, so as to include the 2d day of January, 1858.

Information, pertaining to the details of this issue, can be obtained by inquiring at the office of the Company.

Interest will be paid, as usual, upon the Stock of the Company, on the 1st of July next.

By order of the Board of Directors,
J. N. PERKINS, Treasurer.

CONTINENTAL BANK, NEW-YORK, April 4, 1857.

CAPITAL STOCK $1,500,000, TO BE INCREASED TO $2,000,000.—The Board of Directors of the Continental Bank, in view of its increasing business, and in pursuance of the authority conferred on them by the articles of Association, have unanimously decided to increase the capital stock by an issue of 5,000 additional shares, of $100 each, which shall be subject in all respects to the stipulations, conditions, and limitations in said articles contained and declared with respect to the shares now existing.

The officers of the Bank having been duly authorized by the Board, hereby give notice that in accordance with such decision, and with the said articles, they will open books of subscription, and receive subscriptions, on the 16th day of June next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M., at the said Bank in the City of New-York, from all persons who shall appear to be registered on that day on the books of the Bank as shareholders in the said Continental Bank, in the proportion of one new share of the increased capital stock at par, to every three shares then held by them respectively.

The amount subscribed, and not paid at the time of subscription, will be payable on the 1st day of July next, when certificates will be issued.

Such portion of the additional 5,000 shares as shall not be taken by the shareholders within ten days after the said 16th day of June, will be disposed of for the benefit of the Association.

The transfer books will be closed from the 16th day of June to the (6th) sixth day of July, both inclusive.
